Post May 1st

Dear friends, while young Americans were fighting on the Western Front in the Great War (WWI), the “Shadow” encouraged a movement to save them from the “demon” alcohol when they returned home. A year before the end of the war, this movement succeeded in having the Eighteenth Amendment added to the Constitution of the United States. The amendment in effect declared that “the sale, manufacture, and transportation of alcohol for consumption were banned.” Even though, President Wilson vetoed the Volstead Act, the official name for the Eighteenth Amendment or Prohibition, Congress overrode his veto with a majority voting to support the act. There is a saying that “you cannot legislate morality”, meaning that moral behavior is about individual choice and cannot be forced on people. Clearly, this adage was proved in how the general population responded to Prohibition, creating what became known as “Bootlegging.” The entry for Prohibition explains: “The illegal production and distribution of liquor, or bootlegging, became rampant. In fact, by 1925 in New York City alone there were anywhere from 30,000 to 100,000 speakeasy clubs.”

Since the Volstead Act became law in 1920, it fell to Wilson’s successor, Republican Warren Harding to implement it. However, his presidency was cut short when he became the fifth victim of Tecumseh’s curse, albeit from natural causes. So ultimately, the bulk of its political impact was on his successor, Calvin Coolidge, who served from 1923 to 1929. The website History.com provided the excerpts below on the man ruling America during this pivotal time:

Calvin Coolidge (1872-1933), the 30th U.S. president... took office on August 3, 1923, following the sudden death of President Warren G. Harding (1865-1923), whose administration was riddled with scandal. Nicknamed “Silent Cal” for his quiet, steadfast and frugal nature, Coolidge... cleaned up the rampant corruption of the Harding administration... He was a pro-business conservative who favored tax cuts and limited government spending. Yet some of his laissez-faire policies also contributed to the economic problems that erupted into the Great Depression... Coolidge’s no-nonsense approach and somber nature stood in stark contrast to his predecessor’s genial personality and casual leadership style... Coolidge’s reputation for honesty and integrity helped him restore public faith in the government... Coolidge ran for president in 1924 and won decisively... Coolidge’s policies in office continued to be guided by his strong belief in private enterprise and small government. He cut taxes, limited government spending and stacked regulatory commissions with people sympathetic to business. Coolidge once said, “The chief business of the American people is business.” He also rejected U.S. membership in the League of Nations and set high tariffs on imported goods to protect American industry. Coolidge remained popular throughout his presidency.

Interestingly, the Volstead Act did not make it illegal to consume alcohol, it just made it near impossible to legally procure it. Consequently, during the time that Prohibition was enforced, the organized bootleggers became very rich and powerful. We see this demonstrated in the Chicago gangster Al Capone becoming a millionaire almost overnight, supplying illegal liquor to people. The police and Federal agencies were outmanned and outgunned, as depicted in the numerous gangster films such as the St. Valentine's Day Massacre.

Prohibition's entry relates the almost hopeless task law enforcement faced during this ill-fated time. When Prohibition became Law, only "1,520 Federal Prohibition agents (police) were given the task of enforcing the law." As Alcohol was freely available in the neighboring countries, legal "distilleries and breweries in Canada, Mexico, and the Caribbean" thrived as Americans flocked to their countries to imbibe alcohol. Unfortunately, innocent US citizens were not the only patrons of these countries' liquor, bootleggers purchased it to import back to the US.

As Hollywood has portrayed Chicago was a hotbed for bootlegging throughout the "Roaring Twenties", with the "notorious" crime bosses "Al Capone and his enemy Bugs Moran", leading the pack. The entry relates that "By the end of the decade Capone controlled all 10,000 speakeasies in Chicago and ruled the bootlegging business from Canada to Florida. Numerous other crimes, including theft and murder, were directly linked to criminal activities in Chicago and elsewhere in violation of prohibition." Obviously, as this situation was engineered by the "Shadow", every aspect of it was strengthened. As the energy in the world was being lowered through the presence of the antichrist, the "Shadow" was able to use one of "his" favorite tools, Greed. With so much money to be made in "Boot-legging", all restraint was removed. Many resorted to any means to get rich, including bank robbery. This in turn created a new type of criminal known as a gangster, who would slaughter anyone standing in their way. It was like the outlaws of the West had resurfaced as the bank-robbers of the 1920s and 1930s. This new breed of criminals required a new way to combat them. That need was answered by J. Edgar Hoover and the newly formed Federal Bureau of Investigation – F.B.I. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Calvin Coolidge – 1872 - 1933

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Calvin Coolidge was born in Vermont on July 4th, 1872. He was a “Republican lawyer who climbed the ladder of Massachusetts politics, becoming the state's 48th governor. His response to the Boston police strike of 1919 thrust him into the national spotlight as a man of decisive action. The next year, Coolidge was elected the country's 29th vice president and succeeded to the presidency upon President Warren G. Harding's sudden death in 1923. Elected in his own right in 1924, Coolidge gained a reputation as a small-government conservative with a taciturn personality and dry sense of humor that earned him the nickname ‘Silent Cal.’ His widespread popularity enabled him to run for a second full term, but Coolidge chose not to run again in 1928, remarking that ten years as president would be ‘longer than any other man has had it—too long!’

“During his gubernatorial career, Coolidge ran on the record of fiscal conservatism, strong support for women's suffrage, and vague opposition to Prohibition. During his presidency, he restored public confidence in the White House after the many scandals of the Harding administration. He signed into law the Indian Citizenship Act of 1924, which granted U.S. citizenship to all Native Americans, and oversaw a period of rapid and expansive economic growth known as the ‘Roaring Twenties’, leaving office with considerable popularity. He was known for his hands-off governing approach and pro-business stances; biographer Claude Fuesse wrote: ‘He embodied the spirit and hopes of the middle class, could interpret their longings, and express their opinions. That he did represent the genius of the average is the most convincing proof of his strength.’

“Coolidge died suddenly from coronary thrombosis at ‘The Beeches’ on January 5th, 1933, at 12:45 p.m., aged 60. Shortly before his death, Coolidge confided to an old friend: ‘I feel I no longer fit in with these times.’ Coolidge is buried in Plymouth Notch Cemetery, Plymouth Notch, Vermont. The nearby family home is maintained as one of the original buildings on the Calvin Coolidge Homestead District site. The State of Vermont dedicated a new visitors’ center nearby to mark Coolidge’s 100th birthday on July 4th, 1972.

“Scholars have ranked Coolidge in the lower half of U.S. presidents. He gains nearly universal praise for his stalwart support of racial equality during a period of heightened racial tension in the nation and is highly praised by advocates of smaller government and laissez-faire economics; supporters of an active central government generally view him far less favorably. His critics argue that he failed to use the country’s economic boom to help struggling farmers and workers in other flailing industries, and there is still much debate among historians as to the extent to which Coolidge’s economic policies contributed to the onset of the Great Depression.”

Post May 2nd

Dear friends, it is true that most F.B.I. agents answered a call to protect the innocent, but alas a few were caught up in the power they held over others. This was one of the ways the “Shadow” corrupted America. For instance, although J Edgar Hoover ostensibly stood for Law and Order, he was not a representative for the “Light.” As history has recorded, he became consumed with power. So much so that his influence on the consciousness stretched into the next “upstepping”, where he was not only the most powerful figure in law enforcement, he also held significant political power through nefarious methods. However, in the 1920s, the lawman was concerned with catching the “gangsters.” Hoover’s page on Encyclopedia Britannica relates his slide towards corruption:

Hoover habitually used the FBI’s enormous surveillance and information-gathering powers to collect damaging information on politicians throughout the country, and he kept the most scurrilous data under his own personal control. He used his possession of these secret files to maintain himself as the FBI’s director and was apparently able to intimidate even sitting presidents by threatening to leak damaging disclosures about them. By the early 1970s he had come under public criticism for his authoritarian administration of the FBI and for his persecution of those he regarded as radicals and subversives...

Hoover oversaw the FBI’s famous “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” list originated in 1932 when wanting public recognition for his work, he started publishing a nationwide dispatch of “Fugitives Wanted by Police.” Apparently, Hoover and the FBI were unstoppable in 1932 creating a “technical laboratory” that could examine handwriting, fingerprints, as well as determine the use of firearms. This laboratory is now in the famous Quantico, Virginia. From the get-go it was an invaluable tool for examining critical evidence for criminal investigations.

The creation of the FBI changed the way law enforcement operated, as before its conception, crime fighting was a local affair. With the enactment of Prohibition, as stated, the criminals were making so much money that they began spreading their influence nationwide. It is interesting that the FBI grew from the fact that bank robbers like John Dillinger, Bonny and Clyde, and Machine Gun Kelley crossed state lines. Tragically, after Prohibition was repealed in 1933, the public enemy number one for the FBI became members of the Mafia.

Wikipedia’s entry for the Mafia relates how this organization originated in Sicily, before coming to America. Cosa Nostra, which became the Mafia, evidently began in the eastern states among the Sicilian and Italian immigrants during the late 19th (1800s) century. As portrayed in multiple films, the Mafia first flexed their muscles in New York City, “gradually progressing from small neighborhood operations in poor Italian ghettos to citywide and eventually international organizations.” According to the entry, the term “godfather” was first used for “A Manu Neura, also known as the “Black Hand.” He started by “extorting Italians (and other immigrants) around New York City”, but when his fellow Sicilian gangsters began joining him in the U.S., he consolidated his power into the Cosa Nostra or Mafia. As such, as an organization they “expanded their criminal activities from extortion to loan-sharking, prostitution, drugs and alcohol, robbery, kidnapping, and murder.” Recruiting young men as “soldiers” was not difficult, as according to the entry, “Many poor Italian immigrants embraced the Mafia as a possible way of gaining power and rising out of the poverty and anti-Italianism in America.”

I find it interesting that the first Mafia gangsters in New York targeted Italians, because they victimized their former neighbors, which kind of alludes to their being bad blood, so to speak, between Sicilians and Italians. The first Sicilian member in the Cosa Nostra who immigrated to America was: “Giuseppe Esposito.” It seems that along with “six other Sicilians”, Esposito bolted for “New York after murdering eleven wealthy landowners, and the chancellor and a vice chancellor of a Sicilian province.” Nevertheless, his freedom was short lived as “He was arrested in New Orleans in 1881 and extradited to Italy.” Although these gangsters were a menace in the first two decades of the 20th century, it was not until the implementation of Prohibition that they became a real threat to the stability of the United States. The entry for the Mafia relates, “Mafia activities were restricted until 1920, when they exploded because of the introduction of Prohibition. An example of the spectacular rise of the mafia due to Prohibition is Al Capone’s syndicate that ‘ruled’ Chicago in the 1920s.” One more surprising thing in the entry was the fact that members of the Mafia were “initiated” into the organization with certain rituals. The author of the entry explains, “The initiation ritual emerged from various sources, such as Roman Catholic confraternities and Masonic Lodges in mid-nineteenth century Sicily and has hardly changed to this day.”

During the “Roaring Twenties”, there was a shift in the consciousness of the American people. Many historians attribute this as a reaction to the Great War. Obviously, Prohibition contributed to this, but I believe the primary cause was that the “Shadow’s” influence was growing with Adolph Hitler’s maturity. Even so, let us first examine this time from the conventional historical reports. According to Encyclopedia Britannica, the Roaring Twenties were defined by its president Calvin Coolidge. Moreover, it appears to agree with the author of Coolidge’s article on History.com that said:

The Roaring Twenties were a time of fast-paced social, cultural and technological changes, and many Americans lived boisterously and spent extravagantly. Some young women adopted the “flapper” lifestyle, and drank alcohol, smoked, danced and wore shorter skirts, makeup and bobbed hair. Women also voted, having won that right with the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution in 1920. Jazz music and Art Deco architecture flourished. Charles Lindbergh (1902-74) made his pioneering solo airplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean in 1927. More people owned automobiles and purchased mass-produced goods such as canned foods. During this era of societal transformation, Coolidge served as a sort of father figure. The quiet, respectable and frugal president provided a comforting symbol of old-fashioned responsibility and virtue.

Coolidge’s page on Encyclopedia Britannica relates he was a more fitting “symbol” for this time than the popular terms of Jazz Age or Roaring Twenties. Even so, the president believed the disillusionment of the Great War and the emancipation of women caused the behavior.

Of course, whenever anything gets out of control, like a balloon overfilled with air, it eventually explodes in a very loud bang throwing out bits of itself in every direction. This occurrence is no different to what happened at the end of the “Roaring Twenties.” Alas, the explosion would not only affect those participating in blowing air into the balloon, so to speak, but also everyone else. First though, let us review how this devastating event came about. Because this “explosion” marks an obvious significant change in the world's consciousness, it starts the second half of this "upstepping." Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

John (J) Edgar Hoover 1856 - 1972

Hoover was born on New Year's Day 1895 in a house on the present site of Capitol Hill United Methodist Church, located on Seward Square near Eastern Market in Washington's Capitol Hill neighborhood Washington, D.C. His parents were Anna Marie and Dickerson Naylor Hoover, who rose to the position of chief of the printing division of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey,. Dickerson Hoover was of English and German ancestry. "Hoover's maternal great-uncle, John Hitz, was a Swiss honorary consul general to the United States. Among his family, he was the closest to his mother, who despite being 'more inclined to instruction', showed great affection towards her son..."

"Hoover was 18 years old when he accepted his first job, an entry-level position as messenger in the orders department at the Library of Congress... half a mile from his house. The experience shaped both Hoover and the creation of the FBI profiles; as Hoover noted in a 1951 letter: 'This job ... trained me in the value of collating material. It gave me an excellent foundation for my work in the FBI where it has been necessary to collate information and evidence.'

Later, he achieved a Bachelor of Law from the George Washington University Law School in 1916, while there he joined the Alpha Nu Chapter of the Kappa Alpha Order, a Southern fraternity that was born out of a desire to continue the heritage of the 'incomparable flower of Southern Knighthood.' This fraternity was formed after the defeat of the Confederacy in 1865. Apparently, some prominent Kappa Alpha alumni influenced Hoover's future beliefs... Hoover graduated with an LL.M. in 1917 from the same university... Immediately after getting his LL.M. degree, Hoover was hired by the Justice Department to work in the War Emergency Division. He accepted the clerkship on July 27th, 1917, aged 22. The job paid $990 a year ($23,500 in 2024 dollars) and was exempt from the draft.

According to his entry, "Hoover soon became the head of the Division's Alien Enemy Bureau, authorized by President Woodrow Wilson at the beginning of World War I to arrest and jail allegedly disloyal foreigners without trial. He received additional authority from the 1917 Espionage Act. Out of a list of 1,400 suspicious Germans living in the U.S., the Bureau arrested 98 and designated 1,172 as arrestable.

"In August 1919, the 24-year-old Hoover became head of the Bureau of Investigation's new General Intelligence Division, also known as the Radical Division, because its goal was to monitor and disrupt the work of domestic radicals. America's First Red Scare was beginning...

At 25-years of age in 1920 "Edgar Hoover was initiated as a Freemason at D.C.'s Federal Lodge No. 1 in Washington, D.C. He went on to join the Scottish Rite in which he was made a 33rd Degree Inspector General Honorary in 1955." Then in 1921, Hoover rose in the Bureau of Investigation to deputy head, and in 1924 the Attorney General made him the acting director. On May 10, 1924, President Calvin Coolidge appointed Hoover as the fifth Director of the Bureau of Investigation, partly in response to allegations that the prior director, William J. Burns, was involved in the Teapot Dome scandal. When Hoover took over the Bureau of Investigation, it had approximately 650 employees, including 441 Special Agents."

Tellingly, "Hoover fired all female agents and banned the future hiring of them." In addition, he "frequently fired Bureau agents... He also relocated agents who had displeased him to career-ending assignments and locations. Melvin Purvis was a prime example: Purvis was one of the most effective agents in capturing and breaking up 1930s gangs, and it is alleged that Hoover maneuvered him out of the Bureau because he was envious of the substantial public recognition Purvis received.

In the end, John Edgar Hoover "expanded the FBI into a larger crime-fighting agency and instituted a number of modernizations to policing technology, such as a centralized fingerprint file and forensic laboratories. Hoover also established and expanded a national blacklist, referred to as the FBI Index or Index List.

Later in life and after his death, Hoover became a controversial figure as evidence of his secretive abuses of power began to surface. He was also found to have routinely violated both the FBI's own policies and the very laws which the FBI was charged with enforcing, and to have collected evidence using illegal surveillance, wiretapping, and burglaries. Hoover consequently amassed a great deal of power and was able to intimidate and threaten political figures, including high-ranking ones." Proving the axiom "Power corrupts, absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Post May 3rd

Dear friends, in this half of the “upstepping”, despite the positive influence of the discovery of pasteurization and penicillin, the pendulum swung in favor of the “Shadow.” This advantage was the result of several factors, which began more than two centuries earlier. Still, I will explain this statement presently, for now, let us continue with the time-line. Having destabilized Europe with the Great War (WWI), together with the Russian Revolution and all it involved, not to mention initiating the emergence of Fascism, the “Shadow” turned “his” attention to the hedonistic populace of America and Capitalism. It was the latter that allowed him to push the button for the catalyst, which facilitated the “Shadow” later temporarily gaining control of the world.

Due to the corruption of Freemasonry and the creation of a de facto oligarchy, in the 1920s most businessmen were continually chasing profit, with little or no regard for their workers or other consequences. For many Americans, it was all about “seizing the day” or “making hay while the sun shines”, as no one knew what the “morrow may bring.” Because many young men were veterans of the Great War, their experiences in the trenches, as well as surviving the Spanish Flu epidemic, gave them a sense of invincibility. Naturally, this feeling was strengthened and encouraged by the “Shadow” through “his” connection to each person, the counterfeit-spirit/pain-body. During the 1920s few people listened to their higher-selves cautioning them to be careful, so, all the “Light” could do at this time, was sit by and watch the inevitable calamity that was coming.

Endless carefree days of pure indulgence, which epitomized the Roaring Twenties, literally came crashing to an end on October 24th, 1929, with the Stock Market Crash. It literally wiped out the savings of numerous Americans, but it also demonstrated that events in America could affect the entire world. The author of the entry for the Stock Market Crash on Wikipedia relates that there were four phases or “Black” days to the Crash, beginning on “Black Thursday” October 24th. Things were no better on the following day, known as “Black Friday”, but as the Stock Market was closed for the weekend, nothing happened for two days. Then on “Black Monday”, the 28th, the out-of-control selling began again, which was tragically exacerbated the next day “Black Tuesday” October 29th, when the Market went into a freefall causing “widespread alarm and the onset of an unprecedented and long-lasting economic depression for the United States and the world.”

From an energetic and consciousness perspective, we can view this entire episode as an explosion of unrestrained fear, where frightened individuals were driven into the survival mode of “looking out for number one.” Their fear caused a downturn, or rather a readjustment in the stock market to turn into a full-blown devastating crash. The stock market crash of 1929 should be a cautionary tale for us all, in that whenever we give into fear then we can cause our own downfall. We witnessed this very scenario in the recent recession. Once again individuals went into survival mode and panicked, causing the situation to get much worse.

Alternatively, if we could all just work together and not give into fear and panic then we can all weather any storm. Unfortunately, in 1929 this concept was unknown, and people’s concern turned into terror and despair, resulting in the recession becoming a devastating catastrophe known as the Great Depression. Again, this was a situation tailor-made for the “Shadow” and “his” agents. When people fell into the mode of survival, only looking out for number one, it removed the spiritual forces of the “Light’s” ability to help. If this sounds strange, let me try to explain. Once a person becomes only concerned with his or her wellbeing and or their families, their consciousness centers on self, isolating themselves from the mass consciousness. After the Stock market crash, as more Americans became desperate, their despair spread throughout the world. Developing into the worldwide Great Depression, exactly what the “Shadow” intended when “he” used Greed to manipulate the American people to “gamble” with stocks. An excerpt from the 1929 Stock market crash’s page on Encyclopedia Britannica relates the extent to which this energy and consciousness affected the world:

Worldwide economic downturn that began in 1929 and lasted until about 1939. It was the longest and most severe depression ever experienced by the industrialized Western world... Although it originated in the United States, the Great Depression caused drastic declines in output, severe unemployment, and acute deflation in almost every country of the world. Its social and cultural effects were no less staggering, especially in the United States, where the Great Depression represented the harshest adversity faced by Americans since the Civil War.

Knowing that the Great Depression was triggered by the panic of self-preservation during the downturn of the stock market in October 1929, I was surprised to learn that the “market” had begun to recover as early as April 1930. Despite the US and world sliding into the Great Depression? Amazingly, by the Spring of 1930, the market had regained nearly 70% of its losses and President Hoover’s administration, as well as business owners “actually spent more in the first half of 1930 than in the corresponding period of the previous year.” My question was “Then why didn’t America’s economy recover in 1930 instead of struggling until the mid-1930s?” The entry presents some interesting reasons why America and the world did not recover. Not surprisingly, the cause of the calamity was fear, as the author notes, people were skittish and having lost so much in the 1929 Crash they tightened their belts, reducing their spending by “ten percent.” Couple this with “a severe drought” that hit the breadbasket of America, “the agricultural heartland” that summer, things went from bad to worse. Consequently, by May 1930, auto sales had declined to below the levels of 1928. Apparently, although the price of goods started declining, initially people’s incomes “held steady” through 1930. However, once they began dropping the next year, there was no stopping it. As America was a world leader, its decline affected the rest of the world, although, the author points out that the US economic downfall was only one “factor that pulled down most other countries.” The world collapse resulted more from “internal weaknesses” in those countries because the stronger nations fared better than weaker ones. Moreover, according to the author, desperate measures meant to “shore up the economies of individual nations through protectionist policies” made matters worse, and “exacerbated the collapse in global trade.” Regardless, overall, the “steady decline” from 1931 continued unabated until it bottomed out in “March 1933.”

The mention of a severe drought in the American Heartland in the entry for the Great Depression, brings me to the discussion on Nature reflecting an excess of emotion emanating from the mass consciousness, in need of transmutation. One of the strongest images of the Great Depression for me, were scenes of the devastating phenomena known as the “Dust Bowl.” Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Post May4th

Dear friends, in previous “upsteppings”, I related that volcanic eruptions were the way the earth dissipated the presence of the Gnostic emotion/element Fire/Ignorance, which translates today as rage and or hatred. However, the Dust Bowl phenomenon was not caused by the presence of ignorance, it was another emotion. Yet, before I discuss what caused the phenomenon from a consciousness perspective, let us look at it from a practical viewpoint. The Dust Bowl’s page on Encyclopedia Britannica relates this catastrophic natural occurrence, which added to the suffering of the working poor living in the heartland of America. This vast area had been the Great Plains of the Native American tribes, but during the Great Depression, parts of Colorado, Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico literally became hell on earth:

Following years of overcultivation and generally poor land management in the 1920s, the region—...suffered a severe drought in the early 1930s that lasted several years. The region's exposed topsoil, robbed of the anchoring, water-retaining roots of its native grasses, was carried off by heavy spring winds. “Black blizzards” of windblown soil blocked out the sun and piled the dirt in drifts. Occasionally the dust storms swept completely across the country to the East Coast. Thousands of families were forced to leave the region at the height of the Great Depression in the early and mid-1930s.

It is important to remember that the four natural Elements also represent emotions. To recap: Air represents Grief, Water Fear, Fire Ignorance, and Earth Confusion. However, Air also represents despair, and a synonym for confusion is bewilderment. (Please note: to differentiate between normal elements and emotions, when referring to them in respect to Transmutation, I will always capitalize them.)

If we examine the emotional structure exhibited during the Great Depression, we can see how the Dust Bowl symbolized the emotional state of the mass consciousness. The first thing we need to do is identify which Elements and Emotions were involved in the phenomenon. For instance, obviously the “dust” of the Earth represents Confusion. Alternatively, the winds of Air creating the dust clouds represent Grief, and the drought caused from heat or Fire represents Ignorance, or rather anger. The only Element absent is Water and the emotion of Fear. At first this seemed to contradict my theory, since the Stock Market Crash and the resulting Depression obviously generated Fear. Nevertheless, although Fear was the overwhelming emotion which led to the catastrophe, it was not the sustaining emotion of the Great Depression, it was Grief/despair and hopelessness (wind/Air) and Confusion and bewilderment (Earth/dust).

I will leave the discussion of the original cause of the drought and its relationship with the element Fire until later. Now I want to relate how the “Light” worked to inspire confidence during these dismal times through a few individuals. In learning of the “Shadow’s” plan to build an oligarchy in America, I thought this included the wealthiest men of the late 19th (1800s) and early 20th centuries, specifically, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, and Henry Ford. Yet after researching their lives I learned a surprising fact. Irrespective of the men’s motives or their companies later actions, I realized that these three men were also used as tools of the “Light.” Have a great weekend, love always, Suzzan

Dear friends, as stated, irrespective of how history judges their business practices, through their philanthropy John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, and Henry Ford became examples of how wealth could and should be used. Key excerpts in all three men’s entries on Wikipedia amply identify them in their philanthropic works. Starting with the Rockefellers, both father and son, John D Rockefeller senior was born in New York state on July 8th, 1839, before the Civil War but did not fight. Instead, as a devout abolitionist he supported the Union financially, with profits from his Standard Oil Company. Like all oil barons, he became obscenely rich becoming the first billionaire.

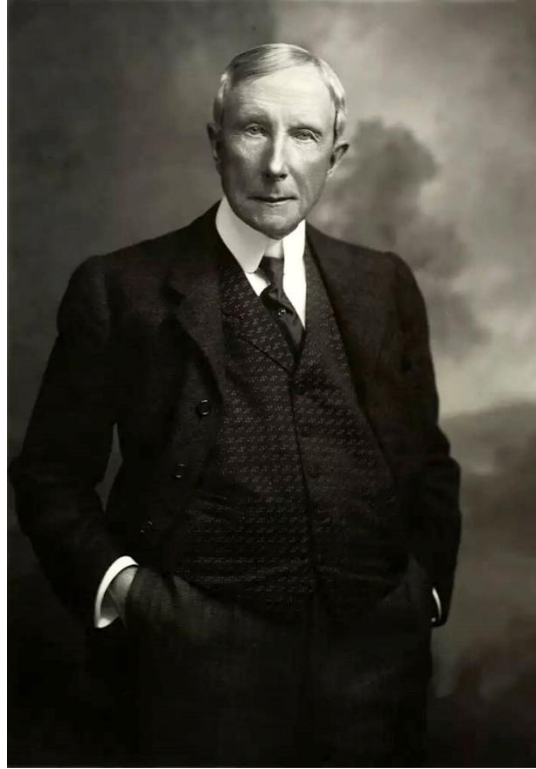

Reading of Rockefeller’s wealth, I was reminded of Jesus’ warning regarding a rich man’s ability to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. For most of my life I thought Jesus’ words, “It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven”, meant that it was impossible for them. However, after learning that the “eye of the needle”, was the name of an extremely short and narrow gate into Jerusalem at the time, I revised my conclusion. For a camel to pass through this gate, the merchant would have to offload his goods and then persuade the camel to get on its knees. From this realization, I understood that Jesus was saying a “rich man” needed to become humble and divest himself of his wealth by helping others.

I am not sure if Rockefeller succeeded in humbling himself, but I am sure that he was inspired by the “Light” to help others. According to the author of the entry, he “spent the last 40 years of his life in retirement. His fortune was mainly used to create the modern systematic approach of targeted philanthropy with foundations. His foundations pioneered the development of medical research and were instrumental in the eradication of hookworm and yellow fever. He is also the founder of both the University of Chicago and Rockefeller University.”

John D. Rockefeller Senior’s attitude of “gain all you can, save all you can, and give all you can” was passed onto his son and grandson, as both of them were recognized as philanthropists. For example, John D Rockefeller II according to his page on Encyclopedia Britannica provided “75,000 jobs” during the Great Depression of the 1930s. In addition, during the Second World War he was instrumental in assisting the creation of the United Service Organizations (USO), to help veterans and their families. When the war ended, John D. Jr “donated” the site for the:

United Nations headquarters, a gift that figured prominently in the decision to locate the world organization in the United States. In 1958 he donated $5 million for the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in New York City. His other philanthropic works included restoration of colonial Williamsburg, Virginia, construction of low-rent housing in poor sections of New York City; and donations to the city's Riverside Church and the Museum of Modern Art.

John D Rockefeller 1839 - 1937

According to his entry on Wikipedia, John Davison Rockefeller Sr. was born on July 8th, 1839. As an American business magnate and philanthropist, he was one of the wealthiest Americans of all time and one of the richest people in modern history. “Rockefeller was born into a large family in Upstate New York who moved several times before eventually settling in Cleveland, Ohio.”

Interestingly, Rockefeller was raised by a “con artist” named William A. Rockefeller Sr. One of six children, he was the second eldest with an older sister and three younger brothers and a younger sister. “His father was of English and German descent, while his mother was of Ulster Scot descent. One source says that some ancestors were Huguenots, the Roquefeuille family, who fled to Germany from France during the reign of Louis XIV and a period of religious persecution. By the time their descendants immigrated to North America, their name had taken German form. William Sr. worked first as a lumberman and then a traveling salesman. He claimed to be a ‘botanic physician’ who sold elixirs... Unshackled by conventional morality, he led a vagabond existence and returned to his family infrequently. Throughout his life, Bill was notorious for conducting schemes...

Hired as an assistant “bookkeeper at age 16” the future oil magnate “went into several business partnerships beginning at age 20, concentrating his business on oil refining. Founding the Standard Oil Company in 1870, Rockefeller ran it until 1897 and remained its largest shareholder. In his retirement, he focused his energy and wealth on philanthropy, especially regarding education, medicine, higher education, and modernizing the American South...

Rockefeller's company and business practices came under criticism, particularly in the writings of author Ida Tarbell. The Supreme Court ruled in 1911 that Standard Oil must be dismantled for violation of federal antitrust laws. It was broken up into 34 separate entities, which included companies that became ExxonMobil, Chevron Corporation, and others—some of which remain among the largest companies by revenue worldwide. Consequently, Rockefeller became the country's first billionaire, with a fortune worth nearly 2% of the national economy...

Along with founding the Chicago and Rockefeller Universities, Rockefeller established the Central Philippine University in the Philippines... He and his wife, Laura Spelman Rockefeller, had five children, four girls and a boy... Religion was a guiding force throughout his life, and he believed it to be the source of his success. Rockefeller was also considered a supporter of capitalism based on a perspective of social Darwinism...

Rockefeller lived out the last 40 years of his life in retirement on his “estate in Westchester County, New York, defining the structure of modern philanthropy, along with other key industrialists such as Andrew Carnegie. His fortune was used chiefly to create the modern systematic approach of targeted philanthropy through the creation of foundations that supported medicine, education, and scientific research. His foundations pioneered developments in medical research and were instrumental in the near-eradication of hookworm in the American South, and yellow fever in the United States...

I have included our next rich philanthropist, Andrew Carnegie because he is mentioned in Rockefeller’s entry, stating that “He and Carnegie gave form and impetus through their charities to the work of Abraham Flexner, who in his essay ‘Medical Education in America’ emphatically endowed empiricism as the basis for the US medical system of the 20th century. The surprising thing is that Andrew Carnegie was an immigrant from Scotland, who became a citizen and not a natural-born American.

His entry on Wikipedia relates that emigrating to America in the mid-19th century, by the outbreak of the Civil War he had amassed a fortune. His story in America begins in 1853 when Carnegie was around 18 years old and “Thomas A. Scott of the Pennsylvania Railroad employed him as a secretary/telegraph operator at a salary of $4.00 per week ($146 by 2023 inflation... At age 24, Scott asked Carnegie if he could handle being superintendent of the Western Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. On December 1st, 1859, Carnegie officially became superintendent of the Western Division. Carnegie then hired his sixteen-year-old brother Tom to be his personal secretary and telegraph operator. Not only did Carnegie hire his brother, but he also hired his cousin, Maria Hogan, who became the first female telegraph operator in the country. As superintendent, Carnegie made a salary of $1500 a year ($51,000 by 2023 inflation). His employment by the Pennsylvania Railroad would be vital to his later success. The railroads were the first big businesses in America, and the Pennsylvania was one of the largest. Carnegie learned much about management and cost control during these years, and from Scott in particular.

“Scott also helped him with his first investments. Many of these were part of the corruption indulged in by Scott and the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, John Edgar Thomson, which consisted of inside trading in companies with which the railroad did business, or payoffs made by contracting parties ‘as part of a quid pro quo’. In 1855, Scott made it possible for Carnegie to invest $500 in the Adams Express Company, which contracted with the Pennsylvania to carry its messengers. The money was secured by his mother's placing of a $600 mortgage on the family's $700 home, but the opportunity was available only because of Carnegie's close relationship with Scott. A few years later, he received a few shares in Theodore Tuttle Woodruff's sleeping car company as a reward for holding shares that Woodruff had given to Scott and Thomson, as a payoff. Reinvesting his returns in such inside investments in railroad-related industries (iron, bridges, and rails), Carnegie slowly accumulated capital, the basis for his later success. Throughout his later career, he made use of his close connections to Thomson and Scott, as he established businesses that supplied rails and bridges to the railroad, offering the two men stakes in his enterprises.”

After the war, he invested in Steel, forming the Carnegie Steel Company, which is where he made his fortune. Born 4 years earlier than Rockefeller on November 25th, 1835, Carnegie was also an example of how great wealth should be used. However, the author of Carnegie's entry adds that “With the fortune he made from business, he later turned to philanthropy.” Focused on education, he founded the Carnegie Corporation of New York, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Carnegie Mellon University, and the Carnegie Museums of Pittsburgh. He also “gave away most of his money to establish many libraries, schools, and universities in America, the United Kingdom and other countries, as well as a pension fund for former employees.” Apparently, Carnegie “devoted the remainder of his life to large-scale philanthropy, with special emphasis on local libraries, world peace, education and scientific research.”

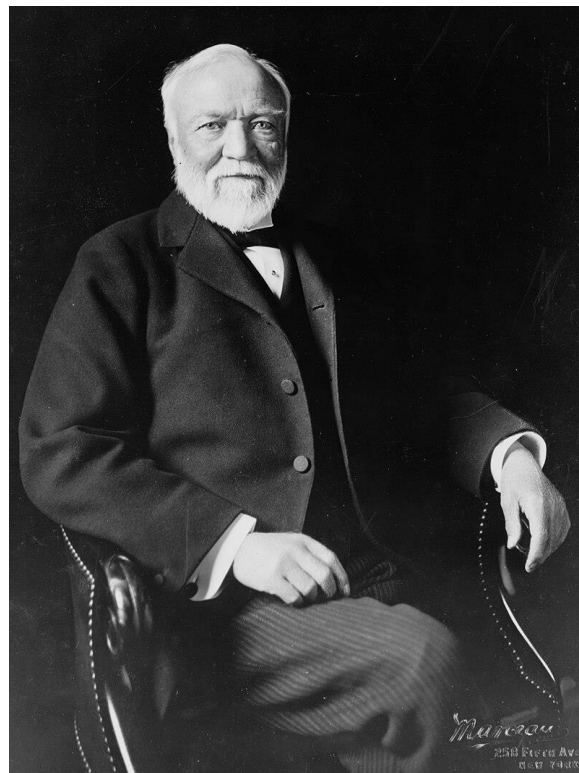

We learn that Andrew Carnegie's generosity knew no bounds, as his entry's author informs us that “During the last 18 years of his life, he gave away around $350 million (roughly $6.5 billion in 2023), almost 90 percent of his fortune, to charities, foundations, and universities.”

Initially, I thought that Carnegie had no family to leave his fortune to, but his entry records that “Carnegie did not want to marry during his mother's lifetime, instead choosing to take care of her in her illness towards the end of her life. After she died in 1886, the 51-year-old Carnegie married Louise Whitfield, was 21 years his junior. In 1897, the couple had their only child, Margaret, whom they named after Carnegie's mother.”

In light of the belief that the world’s resources are controlled by the richest 1% of the population. It is refreshing to read that although “Carnegie gave ‘formal allegiance’ to the Republican Party, though he was said to be ‘a violent opponent of some of the most sacred doctrines’ of the party.” Amazingly, in an 1889 article entitled ‘The Gospel of Wealth’ Carnegie challenged “the rich to use their wealth to improve society, expressed support for progressive taxation and an estate tax, and stimulated a wave of philanthropy.”

In the end, when he died of pneumonia on August 11th, 1919, Carnegie left the world with this thought. “The amassing of wealth is one of the worse species of idolatry.” He believed that there was “No idol more debasing than the worship of money” and for anyone who “dies” rich, they die “disgraced.” Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Andrew Carnegie 1835 - 1919

Andrew Carnegie's biographer, Burton J. Hendrick sums up this remarkable man's legacy when he writes that Carnegie's:

"... benefactions amounted to $350,000,000—for he gave away not only his annual income of something more than $12,500,000, but most of the principal as well... His largest gifts were $125,000,000 to the Carnegie Corporation of New York (this same body also became his residuary legatee), $60,000,000 to public library buildings, $20,000,000 to colleges (usually the smaller ones), $6,000,000 to church organs, $29,000,000 to the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, $22,000,000 to the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburgh, $22,000,000 to the Carnegie Institution of Washington, $10,000,000 to Hero Funds, $10,000,000 to the Endowment for International Peace, $10,000,000 to the Scottish Universities Trust, $10,000,000 to the United Kingdom Trust, and $3,750,000 to the Dunfermline Trust."

Hendrick argues that:

" These gifts fairly picture Carnegie's conception of the best ways to improve the status of the common man. They represent all his personal tastes—his love of books, art, music, and nature—and the reforms which he regarded as most essential to human progress—scientific research, education both literary and technical, and, above all, the abolition of war. The expenditure the public most associates with Carnegie's name is that for public libraries. Carnegie himself frequently said that his favorite benefaction was the Hero Fund—among other reasons, because "it came up my ain back"; but probably deep in his own mind his library gifts took precedence over all others in importance. There was only one genuine remedy, he believed, for the ills that beset the human race, and that was enlightenment. "Let there be light" was the motto that, in the early days, he insisted on placing in all his library buildings. As to the greatest endowment of all, the Carnegie Corporation, that was merely Andrew Carnegie in permanently organized form; it was established to carry on, after Carnegie's death, the work to which he had given personal attention in his own lifetime."

Dear friends, our last philanthropist, Henry Ford, was born July 30th, 1863, in Michigan during the American Civil War. Henry Ford's goal in life was to make transportation available to everyone, which he achieved by creating the modern assembly line. This made his Model T affordable and "revolutionized transportation and American industry." His greatest achievement was, as his entry relates, "Fordism", which created the "mass production" of economic automobiles utilizing an "assembly line." Fordism also incorporated a comfortable life for his workers, as he shared his success through "high wages" for all of his employees. Evidently, Ford "had a global vision, with consumerism as the key to peace." Ultimately, Henry Ford's "intense commitment to lowering costs resulted in many technical and business innovations.” One of these was creating “a franchise system that put a dealership in every city in North America, and in major cities on six continents.” Noteworthy is that “Ford left most of his vast wealth to the Ford Foundation but arranged for his family to control the company permanently.”

Returning to Jesus’ warning to the rich man in the Gospels, obviously in the Holy Lands people could survive on very little, plus, the climate allowed for sleeping outside. As with everything, different conditions call for different actions. Nowadays, people can live luxurious lives so long as it is not at the expense of another person’s suffering. In the case of the three great philanthropists above, their lifestyles were not created from exploitation of their employees. During their lifetimes, individuals working in any of the fields or companies created by these men, earned good wages and lived comfortable lives. This unfortunately was not the case for most of the “nouveau riche” that manifested in the 20th century, where every business decision is profit driven. That said, our three philanthropists were not members of the “Orders of the Quest,” because they were double-edge swords. True, their philanthropy and compassion went a long way to helping relieve suffering, but the industries that they created have led to the devastation of Climate Change and mass extinction that we are experiencing today.

While I was working on this part of my treatise, I was plagued by the question of how the “Shadow’s” victory over the “Light” was so complete at such a crucial time. The answer as always lay in examining the problem from an energetic, and consciousness perspective. Foremost, we need to understand that the “Light” or rather Great Spirit-Mind’s plan was in several stages. “His/Her primary purpose was to prepare the ground for the Universal Christ’s energetic return, initially through building the capital of America under the beneficent guidance of Melchizedek and Sophia. This was the reason why the designers carefully laid out the city to reflect the three fixed stars surrounding Virgo.

The second stage was set to occur when the Angel of the Sun took over from the Angel of the Moon in 1881, which caused The Christ’s energies to join Melchizedek and Sophia in the last full century before the end of the Age of Pisces. Accompanying this stage were the “Orders of the Quest.” These men were tasked with guiding the country through fair and just laws, ensuring spiritual development, which was becoming greatly accelerated through multiple inventions. It was a sound plan, as society progressed in knowledge and understanding, when the Archetype for The Christ, the planetoid Chiron was discovered in 1977, then the final phase was activated. These final decades were meant to be a time of great spiritual growth in the population, in preparation for The Christ’s entry into the mass consciousness on April 4th, 1994. Unfortunately, as history has shown most of the “plan” went awry, because of the “Light’s” representatives’ mistakes.

Tecumseh’s Curse together with the change from the energy of life to death in Freemasonry, effectively derailed the “plan”, at least temporarily. Afterwards, instead of the “Light’s” council steering America, the “Shadow” gained supremacy in influence, directing it down the wrong path. This misdirection resulted in America becoming all about profit and ambition. Businesses that were supposed to bring prosperity to everyone began to use their employees to get richer. This was exacerbated with the expansion of the New York Stock Exchange, which was developed in 1817. Normally, this creation would appear in the section its “upstepping” affected, but as it did not really become an effective tool of the “Shadow” until the 20th century, I include it in this section. In my opinion, the trading of stocks is one of the most successful moves the “Shadow” made in sabotaging the spiritual development of America, but before I explain why, I will relate excerpts from New York Stock Exchange’s page on Encyclopedia Britannica:

The exchange evolved from a meeting of 24 men under a buttonwood tree in 1792 on what is now Wall Street in New York City. It was formally constituted as the New York Stock and Exchange Board in 1817. The present name was adopted in 1863. For most of the NYSE's history, ownership of the exchange was controlled by members—limited to 1,366 (since 1953)—and the only means of obtaining a membership was by purchasing (since 1868) a seat from an existing member.

Tying businesses’ success to stock prices, puts the onus, or aim purely on profit and encourages business owners to cut costs at their employees’ expense. Nowadays, many people are “gambling” on stocks and building port folios, pushing businesses to continually increase their profits, which in turn leads to hardship in the working population. I will come back to this later, but for now I want to return to the energetic, and consciousness result of the “Shadow” creating a de facto oligarchy within America.

First, I must say that the “oligarchy” is not just an organization of individuals. It is also a conscious and energetic one that affects unwary people to further the “Shadow’s” agenda. (Lest we should forget, the “Shadow’s” agenda was to maintain the status quo, which means preventing spiritual development of any kind.) The “Shadow” achieved this throughout the 20th century, by manipulating the implementation of unfair taxes, unjust and unwise laws, and government corruption. Unfortunately, as America was originally the base for the development of the highest level of consciousness, the 7th sub-race or level of Root-race 7, as we will see in the following posts, its shift affected the entire world. If it seems unfair to place the responsibility for the world's degeneration on the United States, then let me reiterate that there is no judgment here, merely an evaluation of the cause and effect of the energy and consciousness. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Henry Ford 1863 - 1947

Henry Ford was born July 30th, 1863, in a farmhouse in Springwells Township, Michigan. His father was an Irishman who had emigrated from Somerset, England in the 16th century. His mother, Mary Ford was born in Michigan as the youngest child of Belgian immigrants. Henry had three brothers and two sisters, all younger than him. According to his entry on Wikipedia “Ford finished eighth grade” and although he did not graduate, “he later took a bookkeeping course at a commercial school.

When Henry’s father gave him a “pocket watch when he was 12”it stirred his curiosity in how it worked, so much so that three years later he was fixing the “timepieces of friends and neighbors.” He was so good that he quickly earned a “reputation” of being competent “watch repair-man.”

However, 1875 seemed to be a pivotal year because another “significant event he later noted that it was “the first vehicle other than horse-drawn that I had ever seen.” A year later, Henry was “devastated” when his mother died.

Although Henry was expected “to take over the family farm” it was the last thing he wanted to do. As he wrote, “I never had any particular love for the farm—it was the mother on the farm I loved.” Consequently, four years later in “1879, Ford left home to work as an apprentice machinist in Detroit, first with James F. Flower & Bros., and later with the Detroit Dry Dock Co. In 1882, he returned to Dearborn to work on the family farm, where he became adept at operating the Westinghouse portable steam engine. He was later hired by Westinghouse to service their steam engines.

“In his farm workshop, Ford built a ‘steam wagon or tractor’ and a steam car, but thought ‘steam was not suitable for light vehicles,’ as ‘the boiler was dangerous.’ Ford also said that he ‘did not see the use of experimenting with electricity, due to the expense of trolley wires, and no storage battery was in sight of a weight that was practical.’ In 1885, Ford repaired an Otto engine, and in 1887 he built a four-cycle model with a one-inch bore and a three-inch stroke. In 1890, Ford started work on a two-cylinder engine. Ford said, ‘In 1892, I completed my first motor car, powered by a two-cylinder four horsepower motor, with a two-and-half-inch bore and a six-inch stroke, which was connected to a countershaft by a belt and then to the rear wheel by a chain... Between 1895 and 1896, Ford drove that machine about 1000 miles. He then started a second car in 1896, eventually building three of them in his home workshop.

“Henry Ford married Clara Jane Bryant (1866–1950) on April 11th, 1888, and supported himself by farming and running a sawmill. They had one child, Edsel Ford (1893–1943).

“In 1891, Ford became an engineer with the Edison Illuminating Company of Detroit. After his promotion to Chief Engineer in 1893, he had enough time and money to devote attention to his experiments on gasoline engines... In 1909, Ford submitted a patent application for his invention for a new transmission mechanism and was awarded one in 1911

“The Model T debuted on October 1, 1908. It had the steering wheel on the left, which every other company soon copied. The entire engine and transmission were enclosed; the four cylinders were cast in a solid block; the suspension used two semi-elliptic springs. The car was very simple to drive, and easy and cheap to repair. It was so cheap at $825 in 1908 ($27,980 today), with the price falling every year, that by the 1920s, a majority of American drivers had learned to drive on the Model T.”

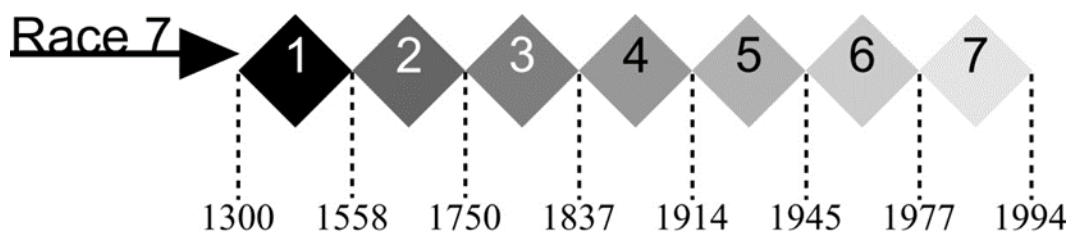

“The introduction of the Ford Model T automobile in 1908 is credited with having revolutionized both transportation and American industry. As the sole owner of the Ford Motor Company, Ford became one of the wealthiest persons in the world. He was also among the pioneers of the five-day work-week. Ford believed that consumerism could help to bring about world peace. His commitment to systematically lowering costs resulted in many technical and business innovations, including a franchise system, which allowed for car dealerships throughout North America and in major cities on six continents.”

Post May 8th

Dear friends, before I discuss the cause and effect of the energy and consciousness in America, I want to clarify my two previous posts on three industrialists' philanthropy during the Great Depression. This was inspired when a member pointed out that Bill Gates and Mark Zuckerberg have both set up non-profit foundations, with similar goals in mind.

Obviously, over the years many millionaires, and more recently billionaires have shared portions of their fortune with various charities, and or set up their own charitable projects to benefit those less fortunate. The point I need to clarify is that the posts concerned examining the impact from an energetic and consciousness perspective in respect to the situation, especially where the inspiration came from and its effect on spiritual evolution, because in the 1930s, Humanity had not reached its full potential with Root-race 7 because as we can see in the diagram below, we still had two levels or sub-races to go.

Diagram of the 7th Root Race and dates of the sub-races

Unfortunately, as the Human Race had not reached full maturity in the 1930s, they were more vulnerable to the “Shadow’s” machinations, some of which I had not realized. It was discovering that the Sicilian Mafia first infiltrated New York that set off bells in my head. When I coupled this with the creation and fall of the Stock Market also in New York, I knew Great Spirit-Mind was subliminally telling me something important happened there. Thinking about it, I remembered something about the history of New York city’s name and found the answer by going back to the city’s origin in the 17th century. Naturally as this was in an earlier “upstepping” I needed to go back to that time, which meant reviewing what I wrote in Volume I about New York and the Stuart King James II’s dealings with the New World.

As I wrote (The Dutch colonized the eastern seaport in America calling it New Netherland, with its capital being New Amsterdam. In 1664, after leading the capture of the Dutch territory, James renamed it New York in honor of one of his titles, Duke of York. This affected the energy in the future influential city. Because before he was king, James as the Duke of York “headed the Royal African Company, which participated in the slave trade.”

Slavery always drags down the energy and consciousness of an area. This is the primary reason why the “Shadow” used the openly Catholic King James II to bring the energy and consciousness of Rome and the Romans to New York. With the very name being associated with making money through cruelty and exploitation, the city would always have to contend with Greed and ruthlessness. However, once this truth comes to light (pun intended), then the good people of New York can transmute the energy. We saw a glimpse of this after 9-11.

In Spiritual Evolution, the highest level of consciousness (Root and sub-races) of the Life-Principle is what the rest of the world will always reflect. It is for this reason that the “Light” has worked so tirelessly to encourage spiritual progress in America, which means the development of unity and cooperation. It is also the reason why the “Shadow” has worked equally as tirelessly to encourage the opposite, namely, self-interest and conflict.

The fact is, Spiritual development occurs when individuals apply The Mysteries to understand self-transformation, which takes a considerable amount of dedication to learning what they are. Accordingly, the “Shadow’s” Modis operandi was to create as much chaos as possible through the above-mentioned methods, because while people are worrying about the essentials of survival, they rarely have time to consider their spiritual development. Moreover, they are easier to manipulate and oppress, hence the Great Depression. Of course, the “Shadow” has also focused on fostering a false sense of spiritual security through the world’s religions, playing the odds that there would not be enough people to wake up and realize that they were not helpless. Nonetheless, I am jumping the gun, because I am still discussing what happened in the Great Depression. Therefore, we see how individuals were inspired to lift themselves up, which in turn lifted the nation’s spirits. We saw two perfect examples of this phenomenon played out in two films released in first decade of the new millennium.

I have learnt that there are very few coincidences in our lives, therefore, when TNT aired two Depression era inspired movies the week that I was working on the Great Depression in my original treatise, I knew I needed to watch them. These movies were “Seabiscuit” and “The Cinderella Man.” Both films were based on true stories, which inspired the populace suffering through the Depression to believe that things could improve again.

According to the entry for the film Seabiscuit, released in 2003, the screenplay is based on “the best-selling book Seabiscuit: An American Legend by Laura Hillenbrand. The story recounts the life and racing career of Seabiscuit, “an undersized and overlooked thoroughbred racehorse.” Since the horse did not fit the accepted criteria for a thoroughbred racehorse, his “unexpected successes made him a hugely popular sensation in the United States near the end of the Great Depression.”

The primary message of the book and film is to not judge by appearances, in that this smaller racehorse was equal if not better than much larger racehorses. Nonetheless, for my part, the most important message was not to give up on apparent lost causes, which can be seen in elements of the film’s plot. The most inspiring aspect of the story for me was what happens after Seabiscuit is injured during a race late in the film. In the movie, a vet advises the owner Charles Howard to put the horse down, because this was the normal procedure when a racehorse was injured. At this point another jockey, Red Pollard, who broke his leg in a separate incident and was told that he would never race again, insists on taking Seabiscuit in order to heal them both. Howard agrees to let Red try, thinking it might help the jockey heal. Over time both the horse and jockey gradually recover.

Even so, the doctors are adamant that Red could never ride competitively, as there was a strong chance that his leg would shatter resulting in him never walking again. Consequently, when Seabiscuit is ready to resume racing, out of concern for Red, Howard arranges for another jockey to ride him. Regardless, Red is not deterred and insists on being allowed to ride the horse. Needless to say, Seabiscuit wins the race demonstrating that nothing is impossible. The narrator of the film sums up Seabiscuit’s effect on the American people, when he says, “You know everyone thinks that we found this broken-down horse and fixed him, but we didn’t, he fixed us, every one of us, and I guess in a way we kinda-fixed each other too.”

Red Pollard riding Seabiscuit

Likewise, with the second film The Cinderella Man, released two years later in 2005 that relates the true story of Jim Braddock's comeback in a boxing title match in 1936? The story of Jim Braddock (played by Russell Crowe) is recorded in his entry on Wikipedia. "Braddock was born in Hell's Kitchen in New York City" and was a successful boxer during the 1920s with "21 knockouts." In 1929, during a fight he lost after a grueling "fifteen rounds", and "badly fractured his right hand in several places." This appears to have been a turning point in his boxing career, as he began losing more fights than he won. Subsequently, the boxing promoters did not want to book him for fights, as he no longer drew the crowds.

When the Great Depression hit the next year, Braddock was forced to work on the docks as a longshoreman. His entry explains how he managed with a broken right hand. "Braddock compensated by using his left hand during his longshoreman work, and it gradually became stronger than his right." The film portrays that when his electricity was turned off, Braddock is forced to swallow his pride and apply to the government for relief. Shortly after this, Braddock's former boxing trainer offered him a match "with the highly touted John 'Corn' Griffin." It was thought to be a foregone conclusion that Griffin would win, however, Braddock had other ideas and "knocked out the 'Ozark Cyclone' in the third round." Belying the naysayers that said Braddock's victory was a one-time fluke, Braddock went on to defeat several other fighters. As a result, he became a contender for the World Heavyweight title against Max Baer. The fight went the full fifteen rounds and "the judges gave Braddock the title with a unanimous decision."

One of the most powerful scenes of the film occurs when a reporter asks Mae Braddock, his wife (played by Renee Zellweger), if she is worried about the fight because Max Baer "had killed two men in the ring?" Of course, the film takes liberties with the character of Max Baer, portraying him as a ruthless fighter without a conscience. Regardless, the historical fact is that Max Baer only killed one man in a knockout and was devastated by this tragedy. Poetic license aside, from an energy perspective, if the scene of the reporter who asked Mae Braddock the question is accurate, he would represent the influence of the "Shadow" using fear to put pressure on Braddock to withdraw. If this sounds contradictory to the nature of the "Shadow", then let me elaborate, the reason why the "Shadow" would attempt to stop the fight was because of its effect on the people. From a consciousness perspective Jim Braddock represented every man who was demoralized by the Great Depression and symbolized the ability to rise again.

I believe the above two true stories were inspired to represent the human spirit's ability to overcome obstacles and get back up after being knocked down. This was a two-pronged mission of the “Light.” The other prong was to inspire FDR to create the massive works programs that would eventually lift America out of the Depression, which was essential because the world was about to face the individuated part of the “Shadow”, the “prince of this world” incarnate. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Post May 9th

Dear friends, before we move into the time of the second Antichrist, Adolf Hitler, I felt it might be beneficial to refresh our memories on what I was shown about the origin of evil. I covered this extensively in the beginning of the Forum, and it is archived on our website in the Forum catch-up document (link in comments below). Consequently, I will pull the most relevant details from it in the following posts.

...what came to be known as the Fall began with well-intentioned angels wishing to speed up evolution by introducing the early humans to psychedelic plants. The problem was they had not developed a self-consciousness yet and their evolving consciousness experienced the world in a kind of dream state. Consequently, when they ingested these plants, the visions experienced were interpreted as real. As with some LSD “trips”, in the 1960s, many of these primitive humans also had bad “trips” as it were. Remembering that at this time the Life-principle was becoming co-creators of their reality, their consciousness was not only connected to the Soul Plane, specifically the Astral or Formative world of Water representing Fear, these thoughts and emotions also had power. As a result, their energy caused fissures within the Formative level, allowing the terrifying thoughts and emotions to escape into the plane above, the Creative world of Air representing anguish and Grief. Over time, their thoughts seeped into every crevice, so to speak, of the Soul Plane, and as they were co-creators their thoughts and emotions began to take form as what was termed the World-Soul. Unfortunately, it only got worse as homo sapiens continued to evolve, and some became more powerful.

When first learning that the “Watcher’s mistake” was introducing psychedelic plants to early humans we wondered why it was so detrimental to spiritual evolution. After all, shamans have used hallucinogenic substances in their sacred ceremonies for millennia. Moreover, people who took LSD in the 1960s claim the experience helped them understand that our reality is an illusion, which quantum physics has proven by showing us that atoms are almost all empty space. The answer to why psychedelics were so harmful to early humans lay in the esoteric term for the Animal soul, Kama Rupa. This is because, esoterically, the Astral Plane is known as Kama Loka, meaning the location for the Animal soul Kama Rupa is connected to that plane, which lest we forget represents Water and Fear, not to mention imagination. This is where Great Spirit-Mind’s statement that the key to the Mysteries is hidden in the English language. Imagination literally means images in action and explains why over time our imaginations took form on the Astral Plane.

Today we know that we access the Astral Plane through meditation, in which we knowingly alter our consciousness. It is safe to do so now because we have a fully autonomous Self-consciousness, which we acquired according to Carl’s investigation of the Mayan Calendar in 3115 B.C.E., at the start of the 6th Wave.

...40,000 years ago, during the 5th (Mayan) Wave, the homo sapiens were dealing with a human consciousness or soul in its embryonic development. As a result, when they experienced hallucinations, they lost their ability to reason, and believing the visions were real, remained in a state of terror. As stated, because the Life-principle was becoming co-creators their thoughts and emotions began to take form as what was termed the World-Soul. Even worse, by exposing their consciousness to the Astral Plane, the 3rd Root-race became driven by their animal soul, and the embryonic human soul was pushed into the background.

Under the influence of the Animal Soul, humanity lost ground in their Spiritual evolution, as many were unable to throw off the lower urges. Even today, we can still see evidence of this in the makeup of gangs with a group of young men or women, kowtowing to an alpha male or female, who they both fear and respect, mirroring the actions of packs of wild animals. An even clearer example is found in the actions of prisoners incarcerated where the strong victimize the weak, proving that when human beings are treated like animals, (caged), they will naturally revert to the basic axiom of survival of the fittest...

Hi everyone, before I get to the subsequent consequences of the “Watcher’s mistake” around 35,000 B.C.E., the accepted time of the demise of the Neanderthal species, I want to make it clear that when we say some people exhibit animal behavior today, we are not saying they are like animals. We are just pointing out that because of the “mistake” at the subconscious level their default mode is a tendency to revert to protecting territory, or “turf”, and or using violence to control others. The truth is these individuals are even more of a victim of the “mistake” than the nonviolent and more civilized. It is those people that will be affected most when a critical mass transforms themselves. Also, it is important to remember that the consequences of the “Watcher’s mistake” was corrected on December 21st, 2021. The only issue spiritually now is the misconception of the continued existence of spiritual evil, which will be addressed later.

...As nature teaches us, there is a distinct hierarchy in the animal kingdom, with prey and victims. Initially, when a newly evolved human soul incarnates its previous animal soul is very strong. Consequently, it needs to choose to control the natural instincts. Regrettably because of the “Watcher’s mistake” causing the creation of the World-Soul through Humanity’s thoughts and emotions escaping into the Soul Plane, a lot of the safe-guards preventing human beings gaining knowledge before they attained wisdom was lost...

Returning to the consequences of the “Watcher’s mistake” ...When the Life-Principle entered the Human Globe Round, it connected to all four levels or planes in the Tree of Life, meaning the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual. With the use of psychedelics, the sheer terror in not being able to understand that the visions weren’t real, caused the Cro-Magnons subconscious to be locked into the Astral plane, and as stated, their terror and anguish gradually took the form of the World-Soul. In turn, as every soul originates from the Soul Plane, an aspect of the World-Soul became a part of every soul in the form of what we termed the counterfeit-spirit, and Eckhart Tolle called the pain-body.

Obviously, as the World-Soul was forming in the Soul Plane that was constructed from The Christ and Sophia's pure consciousness, initially, it was not all bad. ...Unfortunately, as the Sephiroth were connected to the Astrological powers or Seven Sacred Planets, they did not escape, because with the insertion of the counterfeit-spirit or pain-body, the entire Soul Plane became corrupted through the chakra system, which naturally involved the Astrological powers. Consequently, their shadow side affected Humanity in different ways, which is what Great Spirit-Mind showed me.

As I understood it, instead of experiencing a gradual ascent through the chakra centers, Humanity was forced to become aware of all seven chakras at once. Developing psychic powers before they were intellectually ready, they were exposed to the full duality of the universe. That meant dealing with the shadow side of the 7 Sacred Planets. Now Saturn's positive traits of patience and self-discipline were countered with Sloth, apathy, and laziness. Jupiter's generosity and dignity became obscured with pride. While Mars' vigor and courage was tainted with Wrath, cruelty, and vengeance. The beneficent rays of the Sun were dimmed by Greed and Gluttony, and the loving affectionate, and fertile Venus became synonymous with Lust. Sensitive Moon began to exhibit the vile trait of Envy, and quick-witted Mercury became associated with fraud, lying, and Falsehood.

The Creator designed our bodies by nature to be the perfect vehicles for Spiritual Evolution. Subsequently, certain centers or chakras, which specific Astrological powers governed, could assist the Life-Principle in the process. This was no longer the case and Humanity fell more and more under the influence of their Animal souls. This influence tended to project the negative side of the Seven Sacred Planets, consequently, humans regressed resulting in their lower emotions continuing to corrupt the World-Soul. At that time, all The Christ and Sophia could do was watch and wait for the entity to become fully conscious, which happened with the emergence of the 4th Root-race, also known as the Atlanteans between 15120 and 10500 B.C.E. It is during this pivotal time that the consequences of the "Watcher's mistake" manifests, as the World-Soul enters the arena of play. Since this is a little over 10,000 years before the next major step in evolution, brought on by the sixth Mayan Wave, knowing how the World-Soul affected us is crucial to understanding why our Earth, Globe D was quarantined.

We will leave the recap there today. Tomorrow we will address what happened when the World Soul consisting of all human thoughts/imagings and the emotions they generate became a fully conscious autonomous entity. Have a great day, love always,

Post May 10th

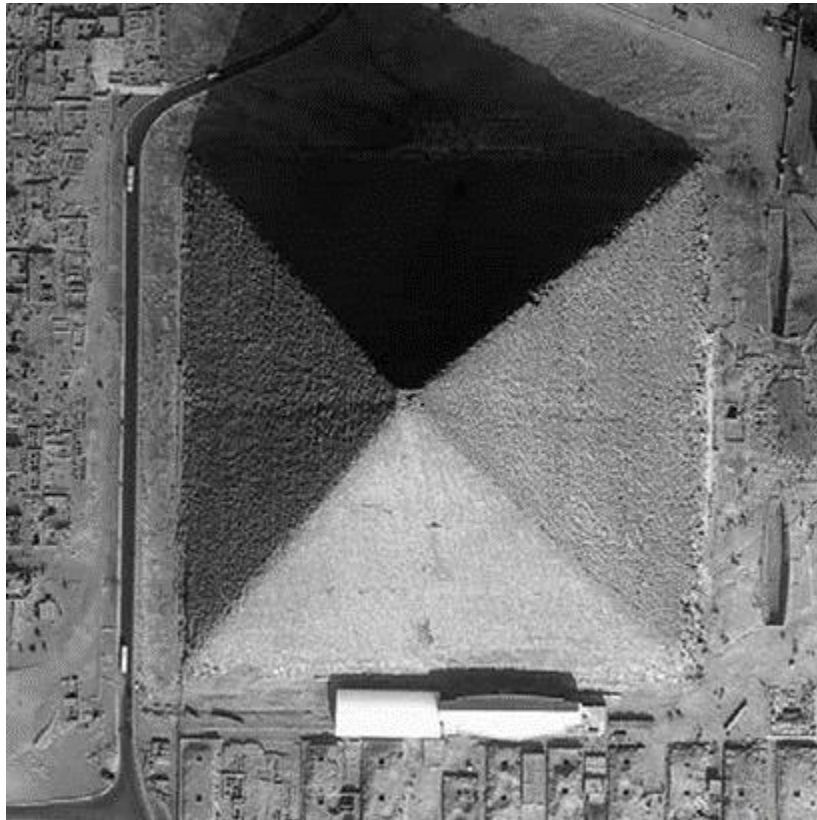

Dear friends, picking up from yesterday as stated, after the “Watcher’s mistake” human thoughts and emotions continued manifesting into a consciousness known as the World-Soul. Unfortunately, not only did the “mistake” corrupt human spiritual development, it resulted in the separation of the active/masculine and passive/feminine aspects in Humanity, throwing everything out of balance. Before this, we were on track to become the co-creators of a paradisaical world without suffering. Afterwards, human beings had to contend with an enemy within, sabotaging their spiritual progress at every opportunity, as well as making them a slave to their desires.

Individually, spiritual evolution entails the Human Race evolving through “upsteppings” of seven subdivisions of seven sections or what ancient wisdom termed seven sub-races in seven Root-races. I must restate that neither term has anything to do with ethnicity or intelligence. As we will see, these terms boil down to indicators of spiritual progress, in that the less materialistic and selfish we are, the more society demonstrates compassion, empathy and altruism, which is portrayed in the “upstepping.”

Following the “Watcher’s mistake” the World-Soul continued to develop an individual consciousness, until around 10,000 B.C.E., it became a fully conscious entity. It was then that the Divine Realm was able to activate their long-term plan to get Spiritual Evolution back on track. Obviously, the plan was driven by the Universal Christ and the Divine Feminine, who as various archetypes began interacting and at times incarnating to teach the Human Race of their origins.

Meanwhile, the World-Soul was working to get stronger through manipulating unsuspecting human beings. This situation continued for nearly seven thousand years, until the Life-principle was ready for the next major step in Conscious and Spiritual Evolution.

Up until 3115 B.C.E., the Life-principle was dominated by the subconscious, however, as Carl Calleman observes, the start of the Mayan Long Count marked a significant change in human consciousness. Identifying the change with the compartmentalization of the brain into eight distinct sections, Carl observed that the Great Pyramid of Giza reflected this in its eight sides, which we can see from the aerial view he provides in his book (below). This is where Gnosticism comes in. To recap:

With the completion of the Ogdoad (8), it seemed to say that future Creation was set to fulfill its destiny. As I said, we saw a connection with our discoveries and Carl's book, The Global Mind and the Rise of Civilization. This is because he writes that in 3115 BCE, humankind "downloaded" a new consciousness that partitioned our brains into 8 segments. Amazingly, Carl was able to show us that this event was represented in the Great Pyramid on the Giza Plateau. I for one, always thought it was 4-sided but from an aerial photograph, we can clearly see each side is concaved in the middle, making it an 8-sided structure.

Consequently, the partitioning of our brains into eight segments reflects the Life-principle manifesting the full consciousness of the Ogdoad. Therefore, the development of the Self-conscious, also known as the spiritual I or Ego, was a natural progression of spiritual and consciousness evolution. Unfortunately, with the advent of the Self-conscious, the World-Soul gained ground, because although the Self-conscious meant independence and individuality, it also meant selfishness and narcissism. Even worse, because of the insertion of the individual part of the World-Soul, the counterfeit-spirit or pain-body was subconscious and passive, following the law of balance, its counterpart was not only self-conscious and active, it was also masculine, which became the dominant drive. Eventually, this impetus resulted in the creation of the false or lower human ego, which became the bane of Humanity for more than 2000 years.

Jumping forward to 750 B.C.E., we enter a pivotal “upstepping” in our Spiritual Evolution. More importantly, from the spiritual perspective it is when everything changes in the Soul Plane. The Gnostic writing known as the Pistis Sophia, records the struggle of Sophia with her former partner What-Has-Been-Willed, who after leaving the Pleroma in search of Sophia became her enemy Self-Will. As stated, the Pistis Sophia speaks of “him” relentlessly pursuing her. However, we reported in Stage 5 of KTI, “Sophia’s constant confession and appeal for forgiveness in abandoning her partner eventually stimulated Self-Will’s Divine nature and “he” woke up, so to speak:”

“...This is where the story reaches a vital turning point, because when What-Has-Been-Willed was awakened in Self-Will, the latter became Divine Will, with “his” consciousness and energy still merged with the World-Soul.

“Regardless of the statement above, the change in Sophia’s partner primarily occurred because at “his” core, Self-Will’s energy and consciousness was of the Pleroma and therefore Divine. As a result, when Self-Will embraced compassion for Sophia, he reconnected with her and his Divine self, transforming into Divine Will. More importantly, because Self-Will was merged with the World-Soul when he transformed into Divine Will, his purified energy created a desire in the entity to purify “itself.” With this new desire, Sophia’s partner was able to persuade the World-Soul to allow his former ally to assist “it” in separating from the basest thoughts and emotions of the Human Race. Then, acting as a filter, Divine Will helped the World-Soul remove its lowest and densest aspects from the two upper levels of the Soul Plane, expelling them through the Formative or Astral Plane of Water into the Material/Physical Plane of Earth. Here the expelled aspects became the “prince of this world” or Eckhart Tolle’s Collective Pain Body, or as we called it the “Shadow of Deception.”

“Following the separation of the basest parts of the World-Soul from the Soul Plane, Divine Will absorbed the remaining consciousness of the entity into himself. In preparing for the worst of the World-Soul, the Divine forces or “Light” knew that the “Shadow of Deception” was a different entity and therefore was a serious problem with the spiritual development of Humanity, as a large number of them were enamored with practicing magic.

To reiterate, Gabriel Naudé explained that there are four categories of “magic.” The first is known as “divine”, or “theurgy which is religious magic.” In this kind of magic, the soul was cleansed “from the contamination of the body.” Interestingly, he does not mention a name for the second kind, but states that it is “benign.” However, the third kind of magic he called “Goetia which he matter-of-factly says, “is witchcraft.” The fourth kind he describes as “natural magic which is natural science.”

Unfortunately, since the use of magic coincided with the rise of the Greek, and Roman empires, drastic measures were needed to prevent not only the corruption of the Soul Plane, but the irreversible damage to the Mass consciousness that Humanity was in danger of causing. Consequently, Sophia’s partner was tasked with temporarily separating the Life Principle from the Globe cycle, before it transferred to Globe D.”

Tomorrow, we will see how the worst aspects of the World-Soul made from the basest human thoughts and emotions is ultimately reflected in the second antichrist Adolf Hitler. Have a great night, love always, Suzzan.

Post May -11th

Dear friends, Adolf Hitler as the reincarnation of Napoleon was always destined to be the vessel for the “prince of this world.” So, does that mean that Napoleon was too? Interestingly, I learned the answer was no, because there is always a gamble when a Divine consciousness incarnates as a human because He/She is forced to deal with everything human beings do, primarily forgetting who they are until they reach the age of Spiritual decision, 21. As a child they have to go through all the emotions of growing up. For this reason, the “Shadow” did not incarnate as Napoleon Bonaparte, “he” merely temporarily possessed him, usually when he was asleep to manipulate his actions during the day. However, with Nostradamus’ second antichrist, the “Shadow” believed that conditions were right, and he would be able to be more effective in human form because he would be a part of the mass consciousness and operate on both planes. If we look closely we can see a powerful force within Adolf Hitler long before he became Fuhrer.

Yet, before examining Hitler’s life, I want to return to my query as to when this happened. Due to world events that clearly had the “Shadow’s” signature on them, as it were, I ruled out any time before 1929. I also knew that “his” primary cohorts in the dastardly plan needed to be in their place of power, i.e., in their political appointments. In 1930, Mussolini and Hirohito were both in power, the former in 1922 as Prime minister of Italy, and the latter in 1926 as Emperor of Japan. Coincidentally, another player in the “Shadow’s” agenda was Joseph Stalin who also came to power in 1922. Energetically, the neutral energy of Pluto was available after its discovery in 1930. So, was this when Adolf Hitler became to all intents and purposes, “evil incarnate?” I do not think so, however, before I nail the exact time down, it may help to review the hi-lights of Hitler’s early life.

Due to this treatise being centered on the role of individuals furthering the “Shadow’s” agenda, or helping fulfill Great Spirit-Mind’s plan, I will focus on events in Adolph Hitler’s life and WWII that demonstrate the influence of the spiritual energies. As I reported, he was born on April 20th, 1889. Although he led Germany in World War II, he was not a native German, he was born in Austria-Hungary and moved to Germany at the age of three. According to his entry, “Hitler attended a Catholic school located in an 11th-century Benedictine cloister, whose walls were engraved in a number of places with crests containing the symbol of the swastika.”

However, we see the most obvious evidence of Adolph Hitler representing the “Shadow” is in his hatred of the Jewish people. We have a window into the mind of this future antichrist through a report from a “childhood friend.” Hitler’s Wikipedia entry states that this “friend” reported Hitler first embraced anti-Semitism in Vienna and was a “confirmed anti-Semite” when he “left Linz, Austria” for Munich. Even before war broke out, Hitler wanted in. Rejected as unfit by the Austria-Hungary military, in February 1914 when war was declared, the 25-year-old volunteered for Kaiser Wilhelm’s German army. After he was accepted, Hitler apparently distinguished himself, as seen in him receiving the Iron Cross for bravery when he was wounded. Following his release from hospital Hitler did not muster out, by stayed in the army returning to Munich.

According to his entry, Hitler fell afoul of the German authorities in the spring of 1924 and was imprisoned in Landsberg Prison for five years. It was here that he teamed up with Rudolf Hess who helped him write the “first volume of Mein Kampf”, which he “dedicated to Thule Society member Dietrich Eckart.”

We get a glimpse of Hitler’s megalomania when he became Chancellor after the death of President Paul von Hindenburg on August 2, 1934. Once in power, Hitler’s cabinet “passed a law proclaiming the presidency dormant and transferred the role and powers of the head of state to Hitler as Führer and Reichskanzler (leader and chancellor).” Moreover, rather than swearing an oath of loyalty to his position as commander, Hitler decreed that everyone swear an oath of loyalty to him personally. Within a year, the Führer was revealing his intentions, portrayed in the author of his entry relating that “A Gestapo report from the spring of 1935 stated that the rank and file of the Nazi Party” would implement a “solution” to the “Jewish problem.” The most troubling aspect of this “solution” was that it was accepted that the “government” would have to implement the solution. As a result, “On the evening of 15 September, Hitler presented two laws before the Reichstag banning sex and marriage between ‘Aryan’ and Jewish Germans.” He also prohibited Jewish Germans from hiring an “Aryan woman under the age of 45.” However, the most blatant anti-Semitic aspect of these laws, which came to be known as the Nuremberg Laws was that they “deprived ‘non-Aryans’ of the benefits of German citizenship.”

Historians have studied every document ever written by Hitler to ascertain what caused such a tragedy as the Holocaust, most concluded that Hitler was a megalomaniac with delusions of grandeur. Although this is a correct assessment, as we know, it only scratches the surface as to the underlying forces driving Hitler. Because historians do not consider Hitler’s status as the second antichrist, or the embodiment of the “prince of this world”, a very large part of detecting his psyche is lost. Moreover, I recently learned there was another reason why he targeted the Jewish nation, which I will get to presently.

At first, I thought that the 7th Wave would reflect Hitler’s birth in 1889, but as the chart below shows, his birth was under the influence of the “god of maize and sustenance” on Day 4. This indicated that an individual’s birth, irrespective of what they do in life, is not always reflected in the Mayan Waves. Rather the Waves appear to influence world events, superbly demonstrated in the time when Hitler’s actions, 1934-1945, did the most damage falling under Night 5 and the “god of darkness.” I cannot think of a more appropriate “god” to represent this period of history.

Nonetheless, I wanted to see if Hitler’s “true” identity could be ascertained from his traditional autobiography. Having discussed his obsessive hatred of the Jews, I felt that the answer might be found in Hitler’s religious views. His entry relates that “In public, Hitler often praised Christian heritage, German Christian culture, and professed a belief in an Aryan Jesus Christ, a Jesus who fought against the Jews.” Deciding to go straight to the horse’s mouth, as it were, I found the excerpt below from one of Hitler’s earliest speeches on No Beliefs.com:

“My feelings as a Christian points me to my Lord and Savior as a fighter. It points me to the man who once in loneliness, surrounded only by a few followers, recognized these Jews for what they were and summoned men to fight against them and who, God's truth! was greatest not as a sufferer but as a fighter. In boundless love as a Christian and as a man I read through the passage which tells us how the Lord at last rose in His might and seized the scourge to drive out of the Temple the brood of vipers and adders. How terrific was His fight for the world against the Jewish poison. To-day, after two thousand years, with deepest emotion I recognize more profoundly than ever before in the fact that it was for this that He had to shed His blood upon the Cross. As a Christian I have no duty to allow myself to be cheated, but I have the duty to be a fighter for truth and justice.... And if there is anything which could demonstrate that we are acting rightly it is the distress that daily grows. For as a Christian I have also a duty to my own people.... When I go out in the morning and see these men standing in their queues and look into their pinched faces, then I believe I would be no Christian, but a very devil if I felt no pity for them, if I did not, as did our Lord two thousand years ago, turn against those by whom to-day this poor people is plundered and exploited.” – Adolf Hitler, in his speech in Munich on 12 April 1922

Apart from traditional Christianity, history records Hitler’s connection with the mysterious Thule Society. For example, as reported, Hitler dedicated his Mein

Kampf to a member of the Thule Society, and he took the swastika symbol from them. As the reversed swastika was detrimental to the spiritual consciousness and required the use of the five-pointed star to nullify it, I wondered what role the Thule society played in the Second World War (WWII).

According to their entry on Wikipedia, evidently “The Thule Society was originally a ‘Germanic study group’ headed by Walter Nauhaus.” It seems Nauhaus was wounded in the Great War (WWI) and became an “art student.” Born in Berlin, he was also “a keeper of pedigrees” for a secret society founded in 1911 known as the “Order of Teutons.” Clearly, the “Shadow” used the Thule Society to influence the young Adolf Hitler, which we see demonstrated in his dedication in Mein Kampf and his adaption of their symbol, the reversed Buddhist swastika in a circle.

Thule Society’s version of the Swastika

The main premise of the Thule Society was the purity of the Aryan Race. Members saw the Aryan Race as the descendants from Thule, A mystical “land located by Greco-Roman geographers in the furthest north”, which is usually interpreted to “mean Scandinavia.” Essentially, “The followers of the Thule Society” apparently admitted that they had little interest in occultist theories, “instead, they were interested in racism and combating Jews and Communists.” Sebottendorff was evidently a prominent member of the Thule Society. Regardless of his pedigree, his influence did not last, because his “book was prohibited and he himself was arrested and imprisoned for a short period in 1934, afterwards departing into a lonely exile in Turkey.”

Regrettably, because the reversed swastika was adopted by Hitler and used in his mass rallies, its energies were infused into Germany and any country that it was prominently displayed. Moreover, several historians believe “that some Thule members and their ideas were incorporated into the Third Reich.” They reached this conclusion because the occult “found favor with Heinrich Himmler who, unlike Hitler, had a great interest in mysticism.” This is interesting because, I learned that a major reason the “Shadow” used Hitler to essentially wipe out the Jewish people was the role the mystical teachings of the Kabbalah would play in transforming the world.

Although a major player with Hitler in the “Shadow’s” agenda, the world stage and history has deemed Benito Mussolini a lesser-known player in the Axis powers of the Second World War (WWII). As such, it is worth reviewing the historians’ account of this misguided soul. Have a great weekend, love always, Suzzan

Adolf Hitler as a soldier in WWI

Post May 13th

Dear friends, like so many would be dictators, Mussolini’s ideology was formed at an early age. According to his entry on Wikipedia, as a child he was caught in a conflict between his “anarchist activist” father and his “devout Catholic” mother. Because of this conflict, Mussolini was “not baptized” as a baby. However, as with Adolf Hitler and Stalin, Mussolini’s opinions were primarily formed by reading the philosophical writings of others.

Benito Mussolini 1900

It seems as though the main influences on the Italian dictator were, “Nietzsche, the sociologist Pareto, and the syndicalist Sorel.” Yet, he later claimed he was influenced by “the French Marxian Convert Charles Péguy.” It seems, the philosopher Péguy was initially drawn to Socialism, but later “became a convert to Roman Catholicism.” Another influence on Mussolini according to his entry was “Hubert Lagardelle (also a French Syndicalist).”

Sounding a lot like Communism, according to its entry, “Syndicalism is a proposed type of economic system, considered a replacement for capitalism. It suggests that workers, industries, and organizations be systematized into confederations or syndicates. It is ‘a system of economic organization in which industries are owned and managed by the workers.’” Nevertheless, the “syndicalist’s” philosophy that most appealed to Mussolini was “Sorel’s emphasis on the need for overthrowing decadent liberal Democracy and Capitalism.” Tellingly, it was Sorel’s belief in the necessity to use “violence” that apparently “appeals to emotion”, which most profoundly “impressed him.”

Notwithstanding Mussolini’s interest in syndicalism, his entry on Wikipedia declares that “Mussolini was an atheist who, in the late 1920s, pretended that he had become a Catholic, so he could consolidate his power in Italy where he was already the dictator.” This statement is supported by Mussolini’s own words in a “political pamphlet” that was entitled “God does not exist.” Furthermore, the Italian dictator is reported to have also stated that “Religion is a species of mental disease” and that religion “had a pathological reaction on mankind.” Mussolini reasoned that “The God of the theologians is the creation of their empty heads, and the history of the saints is mainly the history of insane people.” Instead, Mussolini believed that in his time “Science” was “destroying religious dogma” because it proved that belief in “the divine creation is recognized as absurd.”

I think there can be little doubt that Mussolini was not enamored with Great Spirit-Mind and considered religion as a form of paranoia. Again, excerpts from his entry encapsulate the political career of Mussolini. Starting with the overnight 1922 March on Rome. Apparently, it was “a coup d'état” that brought Mussolini’s National Fascist Party to power. At the time, Italy had a ruling monarch, King Victor Emmanuel II, but he was also caught up in the energy of Fascism and “handed over power to Mussolini.” After more than two years in power, Mussolini was confident of the Italian public’s support. Consequently, from 1925 until 1927, the new prime minister systematically “dismantled virtually all constitutional and conventional restraints on his power, thereby building a police state.” Caught up in his own propaganda, Mussolini had passed a law in 1925, which “changed his formal title” from Prime minister to “head of the government.” For the Italian dictator, this removed any obligation to report to anyone other than the king, who was the only person capable of removing him. This act made him the “dictator of Italy.” Drunk with power, the author tells us that “Mussolini’s foremost priority was the subjugation of the minds of the Italian people and the use of propaganda.” To further his position, “In 1927, Mussolini was baptized by a Roman Catholic priest.” He took this step, to remove all “Catholic opposition”, who were vocal in their condemnation of “a regime which had “virtually blackmailed the Vatican.” All of this was moot, because within a decade Mussolini had teamed up with the “prince of this world’s” embodiment, Adolph Hitler. The author of Mussolini’s entry sums the effect of this “unholy” alliance, saying, “By 1938, the enormous influence Hitler now had over Mussolini became clear with the introduction of the Manifesto of Race. The Manifesto, which was closely modeled on the Nazi Nuremberg laws, stripped Jews of their Italian citizenship and with it any position in the government or professions.” Tomorrow, we turn to who the “Light” called to take on this threat. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Benito Mussolini with Adolf Hitler 1939

Post May 14th

Dear friends, while the “Shadow” used Mussolini as a tool to claim ultimate power in Italy in the early 1930s, America was still suffering through the Great Depression. The president at the time was Herbert Hoover who appeared ill-equipped to deal with the crisis gripping the country. In the film, The Cinderella Man, Jim Braddock is sent to help a friend living in “Hooverville” in Central Park, which came to define the Great Depression and President Hoover’s apparent disregard for the suffering of the American people, but was that a fair assumption? Some historians report President Hoover failed to see how serious the situation was in 1929 and implemented policies, which made the situation far worse. However, his page on Encyclopedia Britannica seemed to contradict this opinion, by stating that President Hoover disagreed with his Republican Party’s position of doing nothing and just standing by until the market rebounded. Instead:

Hoover took prompt action. He called business leaders to the White House to urge them not to lay off workers or cut wages. He urged state and local governments to join private charities in caring for Americans made destitute by the Depression. He asked Congress to appropriate money for public-works projects to expand government employment. In 1931 he backed creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC, established 1932), a large-scale lending institution intended to help banks and industries and thereby promote a general recovery.

There are several clues in determining whether the “Light” or the “Shadow” was inspiring President Hoover. We can attribute the failures of his policies to correct the downward spiral to two factors. Clearly, one is the economic conditions, but the second factor was the general consciousness of those responsible for implementing his policies. First, President Hoover’s Republican attitude did not help. His policy that everyone should be independent and self-reliant, although an ideally healthy attitude, in reality is impractical. This is because it is rarely possible for the poor and disenfranchised to be self-reliant in the face of adversity. As bad as this was, it was his policy of “isolating” America by raising tariffs on all imported goods that sealed his fate in respect to receiving assistance from the “Light.” This attitude more than any other demonstrated a selfish attitude, which removed America from a global consciousness working together for the benefit of all. Nonetheless, it is evident that President Hoover did experience a “change of heart” towards the end of his term as president, depicted in his implementation of the “Emergency Relief and Construction Act.” Although his administration did not receive credit for this inspiration, Americans benefited from it through the tool of the “Light” and member of the “Orders of the Quest”, who would replace Hoover in 1933, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Herbert Clark Hoover 1874 - 1964

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Herbert Clark Hoover was born on August 10th, 1874. As an American politician and humanitarian, he “served as the 31st president of the United States from 1929 to 1933. A member of the Republican Party, he held office during the onset of the Great Depression. A wealthy mining engineer before his presidency, Hoover led the wartime Commission for Relief in Belgium, served as the director of the U.S. Food Administration, and served as the U.S. secretary of commerce.

“Born to a Quaker family in West Branch, Iowa, Hoover grew up in Oregon. He was one of the first graduates of the new Stanford University in 1895. He took a position with a London-based mining company working in Australia and China. He rapidly became a wealthy mining engineer. In 1914, the outbreak of World War I, he organized and headed the Commission for Relief in Belgium, an international relief organization that provided food to occupied Belgium. When the U.S. entered the war in 1917, President Woodrow Wilson appointed Hoover to lead the Food Administration. He became famous as his country's "food czar". After the war, Hoover led the American Relief Administration, which provided food to the starving millions in Central and Eastern Europe, especially Russia. Hoover's wartime service made him a favorite of many progressives, and he unsuccessfully sought the Republican nomination in the 1920 U.S. presidential election.

“Hoover served as the secretary of commerce under presidents Warren G. Harding and Calvin Coolidge. Hoover was an unusually active and visible Cabinet member, becoming known as "Secretary of Commerce and Under-Secretary of all other departments." He was influential in the development of air travel and radio. He led the federal response to the Great Mississippi Flood of 1927. Hoover won the Republican nomination in the 1928 presidential election and defeated Democratic candidate Al Smith in a landslide. In 1929, Hoover assumed the presidency during a period of widespread economic stability. However, during his first year in office, the stock market crashed, signaling the onset of the Great Depression, which dominated Hoover's presidency. Hoover's response to the depression was widely seen as lackluster and he scapegoated Mexican Americans for the economic crisis. Approximately 1.5-2 million Mexican Americans were forcibly "repatriated" to Mexico in a forced migration campaign known as the Mexican Repatriation — a majority of them were born in the United States.

“In the midst of the Great Depression, Hoover was decisively defeated by Democratic nominee Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1932 presidential election. Hoover's retirement was over 31 years long, one of the longest presidential retirements. He authored numerous works and became increasingly conservative in retirement. He strongly criticized Roosevelt's foreign policy and the New Deal. In the 1940s and 1950s, public opinion of Hoover improved largely due to his service in various assignments for presidents Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower, including chairing the influential Hoover Commission. Critical assessments of his presidency by historians and political scientists generally rank him as a significantly below-average president, although Hoover has received praise for his actions as a humanitarian and public official. ...Hoover faced three major illnesses during the last two years of his life, including an August 1962 operation in which a growth on his large intestine was removed. He died in New York City on October 20th, 1964, following massive internal bleeding.”

Post May 15th

Dear friends, I found a fountain of information on this influential man in an autobiographical book entitled FRANKLIN DELANO Roosevelt: CHAMPION OF FREEDOM by Conrad Black. The author revealed some very interesting insights into this president. Considering Roosevelt's status as a member of the "Orders of the Quest", I was interested to read that very early on, Roosevelt sensed that he was destined for greatness. Mr. Black tells us that Roosevelt began to sense his destiny during Theodore Roosevelt's rise to the presidency. He writes that this was a "gradual" development "between his fifteenth and twenty-fifth years." Franklin felt that "he would become God's chosen, and the American peoples' constitutionally elected, instrument for the stewardship of the country." The author believes that rather than some form of messiah, Franklin saw his purpose was to be a "bridge between the divine ideal of what his mighty nation could be and the reality of what its talented and generous, but very human population could be led to achieve." When Roosevelt was struck down by Polio, he viewed it as part of the test that "God" had set him. Ultimately, Roosevelt knew that "great achievements would not come easily."

The excerpt above suggests to me that Roosevelt may have been more conscious of his role as a member of the "Orders of the Quest", than other members in the past. Consequently, I felt that his contribution to the "Light's" objective would have been more pronounced. We can detect his sense of destiny to the American people through the words of his speech, when he accepted the Democratic nomination in 1932. I found this excerpt from his entry on Wikipedia: "Throughout the nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth... I pledge you, I pledge myself to a new deal for the American people... This is more than a political campaign. It is a call to arms."

FDR's belief of his manifest destiny is even more obvious during his inaugural speech, when he won the election in 1933. His speech focused on the Depression that still held America in its iron grip. History recorded his speech for posterity and I wish I could reprint it all, but for the sake of space I have chosen the most salient excerpts:

...This is preeminently the time to speak the truth, the whole truth, frankly and boldly... This great Nation will endure as it has endured, will revive and will prosper. So, first of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself—nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes... In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory. I am convinced that you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days. In such a spirit on my part and on yours we face our common difficulties... Only a foolish optimist can deny the dark realities of the moment... Nature still offers her bounty... Plenty is at our doorstep, but a generous use of it languishes in the very sight of the supply. Primarily this is because the rulers of the exchange of mankind's goods have failed, through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence, have admitted their failure, and abdicated. Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of public opinion... The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization... Happiness lies not in the mere possession of money; it lies in the joy of achievement, in the thrill of creative effort... These dark days will be worth all they cost us if they teach us that our true destiny is not to be ministered unto but to minister to ourselves and to our fellow men. ...Recognition of the falsity of material wealth as the standard of success goes hand in hand with the abandonment of the false belief that public office and high political position are to be valued only by the standards of pride of place and personal profit; and there must be an end to a conduct in banking and in business which too often has given to a sacred trust the likeness of callous and selfish wrongdoing... Our greatest primary task is to put people to work... Hand in hand with this we must frankly recognize the overbalance of population in our industrial centers and... endeavor to provide a better use of the land... It can be helped by preventing realistically the tragedy of the growing loss through foreclosure of our small homes and our farms... There are many ways in which it can be helped, but it can never be helped merely by talking about it. We must act and act quickly... there must be a strict supervision of all banking and credits and investments; there must be an end to speculation with other people's money, and there must be provision for an adequate but sound currency... I shall spare no effort to restore world trade by international economic readjustment, but the emergency at home cannot wait on that accomplishment. The basic thought that guides these specific means of national recovery is not narrowly nationalistic. It is the insistence, as a first consideration, upon the interdependence of the various elements in all parts of the United States—a recognition of the old and permanently important manifestation of the American spirit of the pioneer. It is the way to recovery. It is the immediate way. It is the strongest assurance that the recovery will endure. In the field of world policy I would dedicate this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor—the neighbor who resolutely respects ...the rights of others—the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors. If I read the temper of our people correctly, we now realize as we have never realized before our interdependence on each other; that we cannot merely take but we must give as well... In this dedication of a Nation we humbly ask the blessing of God. May He protect each and every one of us. May He guide me in the days to come.

Almost immediately after Roosevelt was inaugurated, he began his plan for the New Deal. Although, perhaps we should call his plan New Deals as there were four different aspects to this plan. True to the nature of politics, the new President met opposition from the start. One of the first relief programs Roosevelt's administration moved to implement was the National Industrial Recovery Act (NIRA). According to the entry, the primary goal of NIRA was "to end cutthroat competition by forcing industries to come up with codes that established the rules of operation for all firms within specific industries, such as minimum prices, agreements not to compete, and production restrictions.” As admirable as NIRA was, because the act required wages to rise and the support of unions, with the “suspension” of “anti-trust laws”, the act ran into serious opposition. Consequently, business leaders brought the issue before the Supreme Court. As at the time, the “Court” was not as objective as it was supposed to be, it generally supported the interests of the wealthy. As a result, the justices found NIRA, to “be unconstitutional by unanimous decision.” Furious at the court, Roosevelt railed “The fundamental purposes and principles of the NIRA are sound. To abandon them is unthinkable. It would spell the return to industrial and labor chaos.” Despite the failure to pass NIRA, Roosevelt did manage to enact sweeping changes in banking with “major new banking regulations.” President Roosevelt also moved to make sure the stock market crash would never happen again, when “In 1934, the Securities and Exchange Commission was created to regulate Wall Street.” As I said, there were multiple New Deals enacted before WWII and each new act received varying degrees of support. Conrad Black explains some of FDR’s most innovative programs.

Relating how President Roosevelt had to engage in “heavy personal lobbying” to get these programs passed, Mr. Black tells us that one of the most successful programs was the WPA (Works Progress or Projects Administration), whose “task” was “to provide work for the unemployed.” The list of the achievements by the WPA program is astounding, because WPA “built, expanded, or renovated 2,500 hospitals, nearly 4,000 schools, 13,000 parks and playgrounds, 7,800 bridges, and 651,000 miles of road.” The WPA also “restored historic buildings” and developed several “imaginative programs for blind, handicapped, retarded, and even deranged people.” There were also programs that targeted the youth of America through the National Youth Administration, in that Roosevelt’s relief program “put hundreds of thousands of young people to useful work.” Ultimately, “The WPA took in about 3.5 million people. The PWA (Public Works Administration), CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps), TVA (Tennessee Valley Authority), and other workfare programs accounted for perhaps a little over two million more.”

Granting that Roosevelt’s New Deal was not perfect, Mr. Black concludes “these New Deal relief programs were invaluable. They salvaged the lives of tens of millions from utter misery and hopelessness.” He thinks that the new Deal revitalized the country by rebuilding the infrastructure and stimulating the environment, which Roosevelt’s administration was able to achieve at a “bargain cost.” For the critics of the New Deal, the proof was in the pudding, so to speak. When Roosevelt took office in 1933 there were 15 million people out of work, after the implementation of the New Deal programs that number dropped to roughly 3.5 million. Those unemployed that did not qualify for the programs, according to Mr.

Black were caught in the safety net of “Social Security and absorbed by the eventual general economic recovery.”

Not surprisingly, the “Shadow” did not sit idly by while the “Light’s” tool was changing the world. Conrad Black’s comment that the New Deal was not perfect, gave me a clue. Unfortunately, the “Shadow’s” counter was to influence the instigation of a program that would have a detrimental effect up to this day. To be honest I only learned of this recently watching Shaquille O’Neal’s 4-part documentary American Race. The mistake manipulated by the “Shadow” was the creation of the National Housing Act of 1934. This was because it established the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), which led to the practice of “red-lining” in 239 cities in the US. Ultimately, the National Housing Act of 1934 caused the creation of slum areas in these cities, where the poor, usually minorities, were prevented from improving their communities.

Obviously, a representative of the “Orders of the Quest” would never knowingly do such a thing, so what happened. An extract from Red-Lining’s entry in Wikipedia explains that in 1935, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB) asked the Home Owners’ Loan Corporation (HOLC) to survey 239 cities for their level of security. Afterwards they divided the city into specific areas through “residential security maps”, which were based on the “level of security” in respect to each area’s “real-estate” value for investment. The maps were designed to create zones suitable for home-loans. Since the suburbs of the city, which was usually the “newest areas” were deemed the most “desirable” for investment in mortgages, they were labeled “Type A” and out-lined in green. “Type B” areas “outlined in blue” were deemed “Still Desirable”, for home-loans. Older properties were designated “Type C” and categorized as “Declining” and “outlined in yellow.” Apparently, these three areas were considered a pretty safe investment. However, the author tells us that “Type D” were in another category all together. These “neighborhoods were outlined in red” and thought to be the riskiest investment “for mortgage support.” Predictably, the author explains the problem. “Type D” areas of a city were generally “the older districts in the center of cities, which were usually “black neighborhoods.

Urban planning historians theorize that the maps were used by private and public entities for years afterwards, in order to deny loans to people in black communities. However, “recent research has indicated that the HOLC did not redline in its own lending activities, and that the racist language reflected the bias of the private sector and experts hired to conduct the appraisals.” Private investors were also consulted and allowed to participate in designating the “red-lined” zones on the maps. The author gives the example of “J.M. Brewer’s 1934 map of Philadelphia.” Evidently, these “Private organizations” maps were “designed to meet the requirements of the Federal Housing Administration's underwriting manual.” It seems that banks needed “to consider FHA standards if they wanted to receive FHA insurance for their loans.” The most damaging aspect of the whole business of “red-lining” neighborhoods was its racism. We see this in that “FHA appraisal manuals instructed banks to steer clear of areas with ‘inharmonious racial groups’ and recommended that municipalities enact racially restrictive zoning ordinances.”

I will come back to the shameful development of Red-lining a little later, but for now I need to move onto the players involved in WWII. When Franklin Delano Roosevelt was struggling to bring America out of the Great Depression, across the pond, another key player in the drama that was about to be played out, was also being moved into position. This “English bulldog” was the archetype for British determination. If Vladimir Lenin was the example of how power corrupts, Winston Churchill was the example of how people can rise to the occasion in the face of adversity. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Franklin Delano Roosevelt 1882 - 1945

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Franklin Delano Roosevelt was born on January 30th, 1882, in the Hudson Valley town of Hyde Park, New York. Commonly known by his initials FDR, was served as the 32nd president of the United States from 1933 until his death in 1945. He is the only U.S. president to have served more than two terms. His initial two terms were centered on combating the Great Depression, while his third and fourth saw him shift his focus to America's involvement in World War II.

...Roosevelt began to practice law in New York City after attending university. He was elected a member of the New York State Senate from 1911 to 1913 and was then the assistant secretary of the Navy under President Woodrow Wilson during World War I. As James M. Cox's running mate on the Democratic Party's ticket in the 1920 U.S. presidential election, he failed in his bid to be vice president, as Cox lost to Republican nominee Warren G. Harding. In 1921, Roosevelt contracted a paralytic illness that permanently paralyzed his legs. Partly through the encouragement of his wife, Eleanor Roosevelt, he returned to public office as governor of New York from 1929 to 1933, during which he promoted programs to combat the Great Depression. In the 1932 presidential election, Roosevelt defeated Republican president Herbert Hoover in a landslide.

During his first 100 days as president, Roosevelt spearheaded unprecedented federal legislation and directed the federal government during most of the Great Depression, implementing the New Deal in response to the most significant economic crisis in American history. He also built the New Deal coalition, realigning American politics into the Fifth Party System and defining American liberalism throughout the mid-20th century. He created numerous programs to provide relief to the unemployed and farmers while seeking economic recovery with the National Recovery Administration and other programs. He also instituted major regulatory reforms related to finance, communications, and labor, and presided over the end of Prohibition. In 1936, Roosevelt won a landslide reelection with the economy having improved from 1933, but the economy relapsed into a deep recession in 1937 and 1938. He was unable to expand the Supreme Court in 1937, the same year the conservative coalition was formed to block the implementation of further New Deal programs and reforms. Major surviving programs and legislation implemented under Roosevelt include the Securities and Exchange Commission, the National Labor Relations Act, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and Social Security. In 1940, he ran successfully for reelection, one entire term before the official implementation of term limits.

With World War II looming after 1938 in addition to the Japanese invasion of China and the aggression of Nazi Germany, Roosevelt gave strong diplomatic and financial support to China, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union, while the U.S. remained officially neutral. Following the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, he obtained a declaration of war on Japan.

After Germany and Italy declared war on the U.S. on December 11, 1941, the U.S. Congress approved a declaration of war in return. He worked closely with other national leaders in leading the Allies against the Axis powers. Roosevelt supervised the mobilization of the American economy to support the war effort and implemented a Europe first strategy. He also initiated the development of the first atomic bomb and worked with the other Allied leaders to lay the groundwork for the United Nations and other post-war institutions, even coining the term "United Nations". Roosevelt won reelection in 1944 but died April 12th 1945 after his physical health seriously and steadily declined during the war years. Since then, several of his actions have come under criticism, including his ordering of the internment of Japanese Americans, German and Italian Americans, and refusal to accept Jewish refugees from Germany or Italy. Nonetheless, historical rankings consistently place him as one of the greatest American presidents.

Post May 16th

Dear friends, one of my strongest childhood memories was watching my mother and father grieve over the death of Winston Churchill at his state funeral. This man, who died January 24th, 1965, was mourned the world over in the same way the citizens would mourn their own beloved national hero. His page on Encyclopedia Britannica, lists this statesman as Sir Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill and tells us that he was born November 30th, 1874, in Blenheim Palace, Oxfordshire. Historians recognize Churchill as the Prime minister of Great Britain, who inspired the British populace to overcome incredible odds to withstand Hitler's unrelenting attempt to conquer Britain. The author of his page sums up Churchill for me in the excerpt below:

...his response to Adolf Hitler's challenge brought him to leadership of a national coalition in 1940. With Franklin D. Roosevelt and Joseph Stalin, he then shaped Allied strategy in World War II, and after the breakdown of the alliance he alerted the West to the expansionist threat of the Soviet Union. He led the Conservative Party back to office in 1951 and remained prime minister until 1955, when ill health forced his resignation.

An incident which reflects the influence of Churchill's ego and counterfeit-spirit concerned his "opposition to granting Dominion status to India." We know this, because he was one of the founders of the India Defense League, a group dedicated to the preservation of British power in India. In speeches and press articles in this period he forecast "widespread British unemployment and civil strife in India should independence be granted." Another controversial episode of Churchill's career was over the affair of King Edward VIII and the American Mrs. Wallace Simpson. According to the entry for the King on Wikipedia, Edward came to the throne of England in 1936 when his father King George V died. At the time, he was committed to marrying Wallace Simpson, who was still married to her second husband Ernest Simpson, who she married in 1928, after divorcing her first American husband, a Navy Lieutenant the year before. Excerpts from King Edward's entry encapsulate the country and the government's reaction to the proposed match. "On 16 November 1936, Edward invited Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin to Buckingham Palace and expressed his desire to marry Wallis Simpson when she became free to re-marry. Baldwin informed the King that his subjects would deem the marriage morally unacceptable, largely because remarriage after divorce was opposed by the Church of England, and the people would not tolerate Wallis as Queen. As King, Edward held the role of Supreme Governor of the Church of England, and the clergy expected him to support the Church's teachings."

Initially, Churchill chose to support Edward and advocated caution in forcing the king to choose between the throne and Wallace Simpson. Playing for time while she remained married, Churchill saw no reason for haste. Nonetheless, the American did obtain a divorce and Edward was determined to marry her. At this declaration, everyone had to choose sides, so to speak, and Churchill found himself the lone voice in support of the king. When according to his entry “he tried to address the Commons to plead for delay”, the members “shouted” him “down.” Churchill was evidently “staggered by the unanimous hostility of all Members” and left the House of Commons with his “reputation” among his peers in Parliament and the British people “badly damaged.” His entry relates that “Churchill himself later wrote ‘I was myself smitten in public opinion that it was the almost universal view that my political life was ended’.” Yet the entry adds that “there is a great deal of debate over Churchill’s motivation for supporting Edward VIII.” With some saying that he was endeavoring “to ‘overthrow the government of feeble men’.” On the other hand, some viewed the statesman’s intentions wholly noble.

Regardless of the people and parliament’s objection, Britain was shocked to its core on December 11th, 1936, when a subdued Edward said emotionally: “I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duties as king as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love.”

Immediately, the throne of the United Kingdom passed to Edward’s younger brother Prince Albert the Duke of York, who became King George VI and his wife the Duchess of York became Queen Elizabeth. As for Edward, he and Wallace Simpson were later married and, in an effort, to smooth the couple’s ruffled feathers, King George graciously conferred the title of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor on his brother and sister-in-law.

Considering that Churchill was opposed to King Edward VIII’s) abdication, I wondered if the entire incident was a spanner in the works of the “Light’s” objective. Thinking about it, I realized that Edward would not have been the best king to lead Britain through the dark days of WWII. Initially, I felt this simply because he was basically selfish and favored his needs above those of his “subjects.” However, as history has revealed, Edward supported Hitler as was witnessed first in his visit to Nazi Germany the following October, where “the Duke gave full Nazi salutes.” Moreover, historians tell us that the “former Austrian ambassador believed Edward favored German fascism as a bulwark against communism.” Therefore, at least “initially” the new Duke favored an alliance with Germany.” The author of his entry speculates that “Edward’s experience of ‘the unending scenes of horror’ during World War I led him to support appeasement.” Nazi documents reveal that “Hitler considered Edward to be friendly towards Nazi Germany” as recorded by the “Nazi Albert Speer” when the Führer told him, “I am certain through him permanent friendly relations could have been achieved. If he had stayed, everything would have been different. His abdication was a severe loss for us.”

Notwithstanding the king’s motives, Edward would never be able to advocate appeasement with Germany, because he abdicated the throne. Above I said that initially I thought Edward VIII’s abdication was for the best, because he was selfish. However, with the shocking scenes from The Crown, Netflix’s hit drama’s second season, it seems the UK and the world may have dodged a bullet with the king’s abdication. In episode 6 the plot centers on the Queen being given secret Nazi documents entitled the Marburg Papers, which allude to the Duke of Windsor colluding with Adolph Hitler. A particularly explosive dialogue related that Edward encouraged Hitler to continue bombing Britain as the British people were close to breaking. His motive was that Hitler had promised to restore him as the King in the Third Reich’s new world, after Germany won the war. Normally, I would have dismissed most of this as coming from the imagination of the writers, but the episode ended with actual photographs of the Duke of Windsor reviewing Hitler’s troops. Even more revealing, apparently, the Marburg files are real documents. All of this suggests to me that rather than being an obstacle to the “Light’s” objective, the abdication was an asset. This still leaves the question as to why Churchill supported Edward as king. Still, I think that Churchill’s motives are moot, because once he saw the Duke giving “full Nazi salutes” to Hitler, any loyalty Churchill may have fostered toward Edward would have vanished. In fact, it may have been the catalyst to shift Churchill to be the great leader he became.

As for Churchill’s nemesis, according to Hitler’s entry on Wikipedia, seeing that the West would not align with him, Hitler began complaining to the League of Nations. His complaint consisted of “what he regarded as British interference in the ‘German sphere’ in Europe, though in the same talk, Hitler made clear his view of Britain as an ideal ally, which for pure selfishness was blocking German plans.” Regardless of the German Chancellor’s apparent willingness to be Britain’s ally, within two years the latter had declared war on the former. Coincidentally, historians cite 1937, the year that Edward and Wallace Simpson visited Germany, as the year Hitler formulated his plan of genocide, otherwise known as the Holocaust. Regrettably, it is to these events in Germany in 1937 that we must turn to know in our quest to unravel what the “Shadow” did and how the “Light” responded. We will also be introducing the third member of the Axis powers, Emperor Hirohito. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Sir Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill 1874 – 1965

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill was born at his family's ancestral home, Blenheim Palace in Oxfordshire on November 30th, 1874. Historians describe him as a British statesman, soldier, and writer who twice served as Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, from 1940 to 1945 during the Second World War, and again from 1951 to 1955. Apart from two years between 1922 and 1924, he was a Member of Parliament (MP) from 1900 to 1964 and represented a total of five constituencies. Ideologically an adherent to economic liberalism and imperialism, he was for most of his career a member of the Conservative Party, which he led from 1940 to 1955. However, he was a member of the Liberal Party from 1904 to 1924.

Churchill was a mixture of English and American parentage, with him being born into the wealthy, aristocratic Spencer family. His father was Lord Randolph Churchill, a member of parliament representing the Conservative Party for Woodstock. His mother, Jennie, was a daughter of Leonard Jerome, a wealthy American businessman.

Joining the British Army in 1895 Churchill saw action in British India, and the Second Boer War, later gaining fame as a war correspondent and writing books about his campaigns. Elected a Conservative MP in 1900, he defected to the Liberals in 1904. As a member of Herbert Henry Asquith's cabinet, Churchill served as President of the Board of Trade and Home Secretary, championing prison reform and workers' social security. As First Lord of the Admiralty during the First World War, he oversaw the Gallipoli campaign, but after it proved a disaster, he was demoted to Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He resigned in November 1915 and joined the Royal Scots Fusiliers on the Western Front for six months. In 1917, he returned to government under David Lloyd George and served successively as Minister of Munitions, Secretary of State for War, Secretary of State for Air, and Secretary of State for the Colonies, overseeing the Anglo-Irish Treaty and British foreign policy in the Middle East. After two years out of Parliament, he served as Chancellor of the Exchequer in Stanley Baldwin's Conservative government, returning the pound sterling in 1925 to the gold standard at its pre-war parity, a move widely seen as creating deflationary pressure and depressing the UK economy.

Throughout the 1930s, Churchill took the lead in calling for British rearmament to counter the growing threat of militarism in Nazi Germany. At the outbreak of the Second World War, he was re-appointed First Lord of the Admiralty. In May 1940, he became prime minister, succeeding Neville Chamberlain. Churchill formed a national government and oversaw British involvement in the Allied war effort against the Axis powers, resulting in victory in 1945. After the Conservatives' defeat in the 1945 general election, he became Leader of the Opposition. Amid the developing Cold War with the Soviet Union, he publicly warned of an "iron curtain" of Soviet influence in Europe and promoted European unity. Between his terms as prime minister, he wrote several books recounting his experience during the war. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1953. He lost the 1950 election but was returned to office in 1951. His second term was preoccupied with foreign affairs, especially Anglo-American relations, and preservation of what remained of the British Empire with India now no longer part of it. Domestically, his government emphasized housebuilding and completed the development of a nuclear weapon (begun by his predecessor). In declining health, Churchill resigned as prime minister in 1955, remaining an MP until 1964. Upon his death on January 24th, 1965, he was given a state funeral.

One of the 20th century's most significant figures, Churchill remains popular in the UK and the rest of the Anglosphere where he is generally viewed as a victorious wartime leader who played an important role in defending liberal democracy against the spread of fascism. While he has been criticized for his views on race and empire alongside some of his wartime decisions, historians often rank Churchill as the greatest prime minister in British history.

Post May 17th

Dear friends, historians trace the inception of the Holocaust in the form of ethnic cleansing to 1937 when Hitler became obsessed with racial purity. The Führer's obsession came from his captivation with a new "pseudo-science" called eugenics. Advocated by "Arthur de Gobineau, a French count", De Gobineau applied the "Darwinian" proposition that evolution reflects the premise of "survival of the fittest" to the "need" for racial purity in the Human Race. Like the natural world causes weaker species to become extinct by killing them off, he also saw the need to "purify" Humanity by culling what he called "inferior" races. I am sure that I do not need to state that this mentality was driven by the "Shadow" and denotes when Hitler became the embodiment of the "prince of this world."

Originally, I thought Hitler became the embodiment of the “Shadow” when he officially became the Führer. Yet, as this was in 1934, the “Shadow” still had a lot to do. Tragically, the integration of the “prince of this world” with Adolf Hitler, marked the beginning of the Holocaust, which led to the death of millions of individuals. Therefore, from 1937, following his “hero’s” (Arthur de Gobineau) recommendations, Hitler began “culling” what he believed were “inferior races.” As his entry relates that Hitler’s initial “victims were children with physical and developmental disabilities.”

Apparently, when the German people found out about his “T4” program, there was a “public outcry.” In response to the “outcry”, Hitler publicly cancelled the program, but the entry tells us that “the killings” did not stop. Estimates of the number of people murdered from 1939 until 1945 range from eleven to fourteen million victims. Apart from the systematic murder of roughly 6 million Jews, there were also Communists, political opponents, members of resistance groups, homosexuals, Romanies (Gypsies), as well as the physically handicapped and mentally retarded. The list of victims also includes Soviet prisoners of war, Jehovah’s Witnesses, Seventh-day Adventists, trade unionists, and psychiatric patients. Most of the murders were conducted in the mass “extermination camp complex of Auschwitz-Birkenau.” True to his nature, Hitler hid behind his henchmen and “never visited” the murder sites, nor did he ever “speak publicly” regarding the exact nature of murdering more than 11 million people. The author of the entry relates that “While no specific order from Hitler authorizing the mass killing has surfaced, there is documentation showing that he approved the Einsatzgruppen killing squads that followed the German army through Poland and Russia. The evidence also suggests that in the fall of 1941 Himmler and Hitler decided upon mass extermination by gassing.”

I found an article entitled Reflecting on the legacies of eugenics on The Wiener Holocaust Library website, and since this erroneous way of thinking clearly driven by the “Shadow of Deception”, may well have led to the Holocaust, I end this post with excerpts from the article:

“Eugenics is based on the erroneous claim that most human activity, whether physical or mental, is determined by heredity. To control heredity, eugenicists claim, is to ensure the betterment of future generations and the survival of the species. Another erroneous claim is that our society is under constant threat from those with physical and mental disabilities. Eugenicists want to prevent these people from having children. Finally, eugenics promises a solution to social problems as varied as crimes, alcoholism, and poverty. None of these claims are substantiated by credible scientific evidence, and none are socially or morally justified. In the 20th century, eugenic beliefs supported the murder of millions of people belonging to religious, ethnic, and sexual minorities, and those living with disabilities. It motivated the institutional confinement and sterilization of those deemed a 'threat' to society which continues to this day.

"Reinvented in late 19th century Britain, modern eugenics married together with a range of academic disciplines such as sociology, statistics, anthropology, and medicine. Incorporating ideas from the medical, social, and natural sciences, eugenics blended opposing visions of human improvement into a new form of scientific knowledge, based on theories of evolution and heredity. Its aims were social and political, including the monitoring of the quality of population, the restriction of immigration, and securing the dominance of certain racial groups. By the 1920s, national eugenics societies were established in most countries, and international congresses allowed eugenicists to meet and share their ideas...

"..Profound socio-political changes brought about by industrialization, the First World War, and the Great Depression created the need to generate a powerful sense of social cohesion and shared national identity. Trying to meet this need, eugenicists often employed discriminatory arguments to justify their visions of national improvement. A person's life was to be determined by biological, social, and cultural boundaries, separating those who belonged to the 'chosen' community from foreigners and outsiders, who were viewed as aliens of potential enemies. At the same time, eugenics created a complementary system of 'internal cleansing', which separated those members of society deemed 'unhealthy', 'diseased', and 'anti-social' from the 'healthy' majority. The 'dysgenic' individuals were often segregated, sterilized, and, in some cases, like Nazi Germany, murdered."

The real tragedy is the "Shadow" succeeded in rooting the belief that striving for racial purity is beneficial to evolution into the mass consciousness. This erroneous concept is what fueled first segregation, and then genocides of the 20th century.

Sadly, the conviction that we are a culmination of inherited genes and need to remove "bad" genes from the gene pool, is still prevalent today. When the truth is that from the spiritual evolution perspective, it has nothing to do with genes, because we have reincarnated into different races and ethnicities multiple times. Moreover, since this is the Fullness of Time, everyone alive today has been born into every nationality, race, ethnicity, religion, and circumstance possible. It's how we learn to work through our conflicts and evolve.

As I said, the Early Church knew that we have lived multiple lives, but under the "Shadow's" influence, was urged to see reincarnation as detrimental to the survival of Christianity and suppressed this vital truth. I believe this was his most successful campaign in undermining the Universal Christ and Divine Feminine's purpose in teaching us of our spiritual origin. The "Shadow" was able to continue denial of reincarnation into our time, despite Biblical scholars observing that Jesus' own words support the belief in more than one life, because of the effect on the energy and consciousness during the Second World War. Anyway, we will come back to this because as we will see, the “Shadow” was only getting started with his machinations. We will discuss how “he” temporarily undermined the Buddha’s mission next. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Post May 18th

Dear friends, at this point, it is time to bring in the 3rd player in the “Shadow’s” agenda, not to mention the third member in the Axis of Evil, Emperor Hirohito. When Hitler became Führer, China was still at war with Japan and initially, Hitler honored their alliance and supplied arms to China against Japan. However, in 1938 Hitler had a change of heart. Surprise, surprise, considering that he was now the embodiment of the “prince of this world.” According to Hitler’s entry, in February of 1938 “Hitler chose to end the alliance with China as the price of gaining an alignment with the more modern and powerful Japan.” After stopping all “arm shipments to China”, he “ordered the recall of all the German officers attached to the Chinese Army.” Naturally, the Chinese did not take this betrayal lying down and immediately retaliated by removing access to “raw materials such as tungsten.” As a result, Germany had no alternative but to “use their limited supply of foreign exchange to buy raw materials on the open market.”

Again, from a military strategic point of view, the “Shadow’s” embodiment did not seem to be acting wisely, because it was Japan joining the Axis that led to America entering WWII. Even so, it only appeared to be an error, because the “Shadow” needed an Eastern country involved in the coming conflict, so that the Far East would become battle-grounds. Remembering that The Buddha’s Plan B involved placing “His” energy and consciousness of compassion in the stupas/Holy Buddhist temples, the “Shadow’s” strategy was to corrupt these areas with hate. “He” succeeded in the lower Eastern countries of Indonesia, Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos, but luckily for the “Light”, Tibet remained a haven, at least during WWII.

Getting back to Emperor Hirohito, a remark in his entry made we wonder if he was manipulated into joining the Axis of Evil. That remark was “Starting from the Mukden Incident in 1931, Japan occupied various Chinese territories and established various puppet governments. Such ‘aggression was recommended to Hirohito’ by his chiefs of staff and prime minister Fumimaro Konoe.”

It seems that Hirohito’s “trusted” advisers may have taken matters into their own hands. Excerpts in the entry for the “Mukden Incident” summed it up for me. Apparently, “Believing that a conflict in Manchuria would be in the best interests of Japan, Army Colonel Seishirō Itagaki and Lieutenant Colonel Kanji Ishiwara” came up with a “plan to prompt Japan to invade Manchuria.” The plan involved luring “Chinese troops by an explosion and then blame them for having caused the disturbance in order to provide a pretext for a formal Japanese invasion.” In Japan, the Japanese press exaggerated the strategic importance of the site, saying it was a crucial bridge. Whereas “in reality”, the actual site was a “small railway section laid on an area of flat land.” The Japanese chose the site deliberately, to avoid “extensive rebuilding that would have been necessary had the site actually been a railway bridge.”

The actions of the Japanese Colonels are textbook strategy for the “Shadow” to create chaos and confusion, by inciting conflict through individual’s egos and counterfeit-spirits. Emperor Hirohito had already been primed to react, because as his entry reports, when he came to power he had to contend with “financial crisis and increasing military power within the government, through both legal and extralegal means. The Imperial Japanese Army and Imperial Japanese Navy held veto power over the formation of cabinets since 1900, and between 1921 and 1944 there were no fewer than 64 incidents of political violence.” In addition to his political problems, Hirohito’s life was threatened when he “narrowly missed assassination” in 1932. That same year, his prime minister, the moderate Inukai Tsuyoshi was not so lucky. His assassination “marked the end of civilian control of the military.” This is demonstrated four years later, when “junior Army officers” organized an unsuccessful “military coup” in February 1936. Exacerbating the seriousness of this “attempted coup” was the fact that “many high-ranking officers including Prince Chichibu (Yasuhito), one of the Emperor's brothers” sympathized with the junior officers. Although unsuccessful, “The coup resulted in the murders of a number of high government and Army officials.”

I am not saying that Emperor Hirohito was blameless, he was not, but I think a case could be made that he was manipulated into joining Hitler. After all, the “Shadow” had targeted Japan with the ideology of Fascism. As an excerpt from the country’s entry says, “the 1920s saw a fragile democracy buckle under a political shift towards fascism. The subsequent ‘Shōwa period’ initially saw the power of the military increased and brought about Japanese expansionism and militarization along with the totalitarianism and ultra-nationalism that are a part of fascist ideology.”<sup>35</sup> The “Shōwa period” obviously concerned the rule of Emperor Hirohito. Nonetheless, I see the Japanese people, like most of the Germans and Italians, as being swept along by the ruling consciousness at this time, the “Shadow”, like an out-of-control freight train. One more point about Fascism I must make, is that this “ideology” was not human, meaning it did not arise naturally from the mass consciousness. All ideologies that do not promote The Christ’s teachings on Love, favor the “Shadow’s” agenda. In this way, we could look at Capitalism and Fascism as opposite ends of Greed. Both are driven by selfishness and seek power and control. As for Communism, it is merely a corruption of Socialism, which is based on the principles that Jesus, The Buddha, and all Christ-like teachers advocated.

Regardless of Fascism being a false construct, it was the conductor of the runaway Freight Train, which was about to engulf the World in abject terror. As Hitler was the embodiment of the “prince of this world”, we know that at some point he freely chose the role. I suspect it concerned the Thule Society, but I will come back to this a little later. In 1938 Hitler was feeling invincible and planning to launch the Second World War, which he saw as merely a continuation of the Great War or WWI.

Due to the Western alliance, Hitler thought that the western nations would immediately mobilize to stop him when he invaded Czechoslovakia. However, he miscalculated the response and was caught off guard when all that happened was a severe reprimand from the western leaders, but no declaration of war. Nonetheless, it led to the infamous conference in Munich where British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain signed the “declaration of Anglo-German friendship.” This led to the famous sight of Chamberlain’s return home and claiming that he had secured “peace in our time.” An extract from the entry relates Hitler’s disappointment that war did not break out over Czechoslovakia. “Hitler always described Britain as the main enemy that had to be defeated, and in his view, Poland’s obliteration was the necessary prelude to that goal.” The Führer professed that he was “offended by the British ‘guarantee’ of Polish independence issued on March 31, 1939”, demonstrated when he said, “I shall brew them a devil's drink.” The author of his entry reports that his bravado was a “part of the new course, in a speech before the Reichstag on April 28, 1939.” In short, “Adolf Hitler complaining of British ‘encirclement’ of Germany” was merely a ploy to renounce “both the Anglo-German Naval Agreement and the German–Polish Non-Aggression Pact.”

Of course, Hitler achieved his goal of provoking confrontation with Britain when the United Kingdom declared war on Germany after he invaded Poland on September 1st, 1939. As Hitler had already signed a “non-aggression pact” with Joseph Stalin a month before, Russia entered WWII as an Axis power. The war remained relatively inactive until April the following year (1940), then the Third Reich launched an attack on Denmark and Norway before invading France in May. Hearing of Hitler’s successes prompted Benito Mussolini to join the Führer in the war a month later. As history has recorded, France quickly fell to the German forces, even though British and Canadian forces joined in the defense of the country. Afterwards, facing overwhelming odds, the Allied forces retreated to the beaches of Dunkirk for evacuation. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Emperor Hirohito 1901 - 1989

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Hirohito was born on April 29th, 1901. Although known to the world as Emperor Hirohito, following his death on January 7th, 1989, he was posthumously honored as Emperor Shōwa. Hirohito as the 124th emperor of Japan, was one of the longest reigning monarchs in the world, with his reign of 62 years being the longest of any Japanese emperor.

Hirohito was born in Aoyama, Tokyo, during the reign of his paternal grandfather, Emperor Meiji. He was the first child of the Crown Prince Yoshihito and Princess Sadako, who became Emperor Taishō and Empress Teimei, respectively. As the grandson of Emperor Meiji, Hirohito was raised away from the court, but returned following his caregiver's death. His education emphasized physical health due to his frailty, alongside values of frugality and devotion to duty. Hirohito's early military commissions and education under influential figures shaped his perspective on Japan's divine imperial lineage, and its role in modernization and diplomacy. His father acceded to the throne in 1912 upon the death of his father Emperor Meiji, making the eleven-year-old Prince Hirohito the heir apparent. Proclaimed crown prince in 1916, Hirohito's overseas visits in 1921 to Western Europe marked a significant step towards international diplomacy for Japan, despite domestic opposition. His experiences abroad, particularly in Britain and meeting with European monarchs, influenced his understanding of international relations and Japan's position on the global stage.

Hirohito assumed regency in 1921 due to his father's health issues, navigating Japan through significant treaties, the 1923 Great Kantō earthquake, and an assassination attempt. In January 1924, he married Princess Nagako Kuni, and their marriage further solidified his position within the imperial family and Japanese society. They had seven children...

When his father died in December 1926, Hirohito—then 25 years old—became emperor of Japan. Reigning as a constitutional monarch, Hirohito was the head of state under the Meiji Constitution during Japanese imperial expansion particularly in China, militarization, and involvement in World War II. During Hirohito's reign, Japan waged a war across Asia in the 1930s and 40s. His involvement in military decisions, particularly in the Second Sino-Japanese War and Pacific Theater of World War II, has been a subject of historical debate regarding his responsibility for war crimes. Despite initial successes, Japan's strategic miscalculations under his reign led to devastating consequences for Japan.

After the surrender of Japan, despite it waging the war in the name of Hirohito, he was not prosecuted for war crimes, for General Douglas MacArthur thought that an ostensibly cooperative emperor would help establish a peaceful Allied occupation and the U.S. achieve its postwar objectives. As a result, MacArthur did everything in his power to exclude any possible evidence that would have incriminated Hirohito and his family during the Tokyo War Crimes Tribunal. On January 1st, 1946, under pressure from the Allies, the Emperor formally renounced his divinity.

Hirohito died aged 87 at Fukiage Palace in January 1989, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Akihito. By 1979, Hirohito was the only remaining monarch in the world with the title "Emperor", after Jean-Bédél Bokassa, Emperor of Central Africa was deposed.

Dear friends, the evacuation of the French, British, and Canadian forces from the beaches of Dunkirk is an example of how will and determination, together with extraordinary courage and selflessness can lead to amazing accomplishments. This extraordinary event holds particular relevance to me, because my father was one of those British soldiers stranded in the sea at Dunkirk. It also set the scene for Churchill to rally the British people to believe that providence was on their side. The Dunkirk evacuation page in Encyclopedia Britannica explains the situation:

(1940) in World War II, the evacuation of the British Expeditionary Force (BEF) and other Allied troops from the French seaport of Dunkirk (Dunkerque) to England. Naval vessels and hundreds of civilian boats were used in the evacuation, which began on May 26. When it ended on June 4, about 198,000 British and 140,000 French and Belgian troops had been saved.

Although Hitler and the “Shadow” seemed unstoppable in the beginning, once the “Shadow” committed to “his” physical vehicle, (the “prince of this world”) “his” actions were limited to what a human being could achieve. Of course, the “Shadow” believed that “his” machinations would continue to serve “his” goals, but representatives of the “Light” were always ready to help when the occasion arose. Therefore, despite engineering the disgrace of Winston Churchill, through the abdication of Edward VIII, in the hope of destabilizing the country and prevent it mounting an adequate defense, the “Shadow” did not account for the spiritual energy in Great Britain. For instance, the successful evacuation of Dunkirk was seen as a miracle, endorsing the belief that Divine Providence was on Britain’s side. Winston Churchill took full advantage of this giving a speech to the House of Commons he called it the greatest military defeat for many centuries, warning that “the whole root, the core, and brain of the British Army” was stranded in Dunkirk. He hailed their subsequent rescue as a “miracle of deliverance.”

In Part 2 of Volume I, I reported that the “Light” preserved the energy and consciousness of The Mysteries throughout Europe and the United Kingdom in the Gothic buildings, built over Earth Stars. As England was also connected to the Palladium of ancient Troy, not to mention Stonehenge and the multiple standing stone circles, there was a unique consciousness in Britain that the people could subliminally draw on. The “Light” had carefully created and nurtured this energy in preparation for the “Shadow’s” attack for millennia. We see an aspect of this consciousness, in the way so many people risked their lives to save the trapped forces at Dunkirk, when literally hundreds of small crafts crossed the channel to pluck the soldiers from the bloody waters of France. As we progress, we will see this energy demonstrated multiple times, but now I want to turn to the man the “Light” chose to lead the charge, as it were, against the tyranny of Fascism and its far worse sister, Nazism, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Sir Winston Churchill. It was the evacuation from Dunkirk that first demonstrated the brilliant oratory skills of Churchill, as his words gave encouragement and support to the populace through some of the darkest times in Britain’s history. In fact, Churchill’s ability to inspire confidence among the populace through words is legendary, demonstrated in the excerpts below from two of his most famous speeches:

June 4th, 1940

“The British Empire and the French Republic, linked together in their cause and in their need, will defend to the death their native soil, aiding each other like good comrades to the utmost of their strength. Even though large tracts of Europe and many old and famous States have fallen or may fall into the grip of the Gestapo and all the odious apparatus of Nazi rule, we shall not flag or fail. We shall go on to the end, we shall fight in France, we shall fight on the seas and oceans, we shall fight with growing confidence and growing strength in the air, we shall defend our Island, whatever the cost may be, we shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills; we shall never surrender, and even if, which I do not for a moment believe, this Island or a large part of it were subjugated and starving, then our Empire beyond the seas, armed and guarded by the British Fleet, would carry on the struggle, until, in God’s good time, the New World, with all its power and might, steps forth to the rescue and the liberation of the old.”

June 18th, 1940 –

“What General Weygand has called the Battle of France is over: the Battle of Britain is about to begin. Upon this battle depends the survival of Christian civilization. Upon it depends our own British life, and the long continuity of our institutions and our Empire. The whole fury and might of the enemy must very soon be turned on us. Hitler knows that he will have to break us in this island or lose the war. If we can stand up to him, all Europe may be freed, and the life of the world may move forward into broad, sunlit uplands. But if we fail, then the whole world, including the United States, including all that we have known and cared for, will sink into the abyss of a new Dark Age made more sinister, and perhaps more protracted, by the lights of perverted science. Let us therefore brace ourselves to our duty and so bear ourselves that, if the British Empire and its Commonwealth last for a thousand years, men will still say: This was their finest hour.”

Whenever I watched films of the Battle of Britain, I marveled that the country was able to withstand the attack. After all, the German Luftwaffe were better trained and more prepared than the British pilots. Logically, the Germans should have been victorious and, yet they were not. A major reason they were unsuccessful, was because the entire nation of Britain was united in a common cause, namely, to prevent Adolph Hitler and the Nazis from conquering the United Kingdom. This meant that the consciousness was in alignment with the divine forces of the “Light.”

A very important influence on the morale of the British people was the “presence in London” of the royal family of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. Considering how American presidents are whisked away the moment there is the slightest chance of danger, amazingly the ruling monarch of the United Kingdom remained in “harm’s way” during the Battle of Britain. I have to wonder if Edward VIII the Duke of Windsor would have remained with his people or flee to Canada as the king and queen were advised to do.

The danger to the royal family was real, as was seen when Buckingham Palace was hit by bombs on two separate occasions. In fact, the second bomb only narrowly missed the king and queen, exploding a few hundred feet from where they were. Nonetheless, the presence of the royal family was not the primary reason the United Kingdom withstood Hitler’s attack in the Battle of Britain. There was an even more powerful energetic reason why the German Luftwaffe failed. I reported in Volume I that many cathedrals and buildings in Britain were built using Sacred Geometry and Earth Stars. As I said, these ancient structures and cathedrals were built to channel positive electro-magnetic energy into the area. Without taking anything away from the extraordinary courage and determination of the British pilots in the Battle of Britain, they were assisted by the energy of the country.

I never really thought about it until we were reminded by David Wilcock’s presentation on YouTube, England is riddled with menhirs, dolmens, and henges. Most of these structures are situated in southern England over which the RAF fought the German Luftwaffe during the Battle of Britain. Nevertheless, Britain not only has its ancient sites it also has its flag, the Union Jack. The entry for the Union Jack on Wikipedia relates that:

After the son of Mary Queen of Scots, James VI of Scotland, was crowned James I of England in 1603, the crowns of the Kingdom of England, Ireland and Wales, as well as Scotland became united.

At that time, Scotland was considered “an independent state”, with its own flag, Saint Andrews’s Cross. Alternatively, England’s flag was the cross of Saint George, which also represented Wales, and Ireland.

April 12th, 1606, King James decreed that a new flag was needed to reflect the “regal union” between the former kingdoms of England and Scotland. It was decided to unite the two creating a new “flag of Great Britain and first union flag.”

The current and second Union Flag dates from January 1st 1801. This flag commemorates the Act of Union in 1800, uniting the Kingdom of Ireland and the Kingdom of Great Britain (Scotland, England, and Wales) to form the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. “The new design added a red saltire, (diagonal red cross) the so-called ‘cross of Saint Patrick’, for Ireland.

FIRST VERSION OF UNION JACK

CURRENT UNION JACK
with
RED SALTIRE FOR IRELAND

History demonstrates that the British Isles has been invaded and conquered multiple times, proving that the English Channel was no barrier. Yet, the German Army that conquered all Western Europe, could not manage to cross this 22-mile stretch of water. It was obvious to me that there was something else going on, there was. A significant clue is that there are several chivalric orders that originate from Saint George, including the Order of the Garter. Consequently, the Union Jack not only represents the unification of the British Isles, its three crosses also symbolize the “Orders of the Quest”, with the most important connection being the red cross on a white background, the insignia of the Knights Templar. I believe the energy of the structures and the symbolism of the Union Jack is one of the ways the “Light” energetically and consciously assisted Great Britain to hang on against enormous odds. In this way the brave men and women received the extra spiritual strength they needed to withstand not only the Battle of Britain, but also the far more brutal London Blitz. Therefore, despite suffering 28, 556 civilian deaths during the London Blitz, the British populace resolve was greatly strengthened.

The defeat of Germany in the Battle of Britain was the first-time Hitler's goals were repelled since taking power. This crucial air battle marks the turning point in the belief of the British public that Hitler could be defeated. In respect to the overall struggle between the "Light" and the "Shadow" the most important result of the Battle of Britain was its effect on the American people. The entry explains that "During the battle, many people from the U.S. accepted the view promoted by Joseph Kennedy, the U.S. ambassador in London, and believed the UK could not survive. However, Roosevelt wanted a second opinion, and sent 'Wild Bill' Donovan on a brief visit to Britain; he became convinced Britain would survive and should be supported in every possible way."

Ultimately the end of the Battle of Britain resulted with Britain strengthening its "military forces" to "establish itself as an Allied stronghold." This was in preparation for Britain to fulfill its role "as a base from which the Liberation of Western Europe was launched." Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Battle of Britain July 10th – October 31st, 1940

Dunkirk Evacuation 1940

Post May 21st

Dear friends, With the mention of Roosevelt's response to the Battle of Britain, it is time to catch up on events occurring in America at the outbreak of the Second World War. Even before Roosevelt was inaugurated, he was confronted with the rise of Adolf Hitler. Conrad Black relates that "The relationship between Adolf Hitler and Franklin D. Roosevelt, coming to office within a few weeks of each other, would be almost openly hostile from the first. They would die less than three weeks apart, still holding those offices, but in circumstances as different as it was possible to conceive." To me, this is so perfectly an example of the representative of the "Light", Roosevelt, taking the opposite position of the embodiment of the "Shadow."

Elaborating on Roosevelt's opinion of Adolf Hitler, Mr. Black writes: "Apart from policy matters, Roosevelt detested Hitler's racism, militarism, totalitarianism, and the espousal, both ludicrous and horrifying, of the mythic amoral superman of German legend and philosophy. Hitler resented America's wealth and despised its polyglotism. He was viscerally repelled by Roosevelt's infirmity and by the number of Jews in his entourage and blacks in his household." (Note: I was unfamiliar with the term polyglotism, so I looked it up and I learned that the noun polyglot means multilingual.) Roosevelt's biography on-line reports the events that led up to America's entry into WWII.

In 1940, Roosevelt began a series of measures to help defend France and Britain from Nazi aggression in World War II, including the Lend-Lease agreement, which Congress passed as the Lend-Lease Act in 1941. During early 1941, with war raging in Europe, Franklin D. Roosevelt pushed to have the United States' factories become an "arsenal of democracy" for the Allies—France, Britain and Russia. As Americans learned more about the war's atrocities, isolationist sentiment diminished. Roosevelt took advantage, standing firm against the Axis Powers of Germany, Italy and Japan. Bipartisan support in Congress expanded the Army and Navy and increased the flow of supplies to the Allies.

America would be forced to enter the war sooner or later. As stated, he succeeded in pulling the country out of the Great Depression by putting the unemployed to work on extensive public reconstruction projects. Afterwards, he began a massive military buildup in preparation for the coming storm. Fulfilling the "Light's" plan, Roosevelt ignored tradition in accepting the two-term limit for the President of the United States, subsequently, he decided to run for a third term in 1940. According to his entry "He won the 1940 election with 55% of the popular vote and 38 of the 48 states."

When F D R ran for his third term it was not with his Vice President Henry A. Wallace. Roosevelt's entry explains, "Party leaders prevailed upon Roosevelt to drop Vice President Wallace from the ticket, believing him to be an electoral liability and a poor potential successor in case of Roosevelt's death. Roosevelt preferred Byrnes as Wallace's replacement but was convinced to support Senator Harry S. Truman of Missouri." I saw the hand of the "Shadow's" agents in this decision, as the "Shadow" did not want Wallace becoming the president. Removing Wallace as Vice President would have dire consequences for the world, but no one other than Great Spirit-Mind knew that then. Energetically the reason the "Shadow" blocked Wallace was because he helped bring the "Light's" influence back into the country. The Vice President did this through persuading President Roosevelt to place the reverse side of the Seal of the United States on the back of the one-dollar bill. This act effectively re-instigated the original initiative to infuse the energy and consciousness of the "Light" into the fabric of the United States.

However, there was another effect of using the reverse side of the seal, which the “Shadow” took full advantage of. Its esoteric implications have led to multiple nefarious conspiracy theories that a secret organization is using it to take over the world. Generally speaking, the “conspiracists” are either members of the Illuminati, and or Freemasons. Before I address the validity of the conspiracy, in the next post I will review the consensus opinions of the conspiracy advocates. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Henry Agard Wallace 1888 - 1965

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Henry Agard Wallace was born on a farm in Iowa on October 7th, 1888. As the oldest son of Henry C. Wallace, who served as U.S. Secretary of Agriculture from 1921 to 1924, after graduating from Iowa State University in 1910, Henry worked as a writer and editor for his family's farm journal, Wallaces' Farmer. He also founded the Hi-Bred Corn Company, a hybrid corn company that became extremely successful. Wallace displayed intellectual curiosity about a wide array of subjects, including statistics and economics, and explored various religious and spiritual movements, including Theosophy. After his father's death in 1924, Wallace drifted away from the Republican Party; he supported Democratic nominee Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1932 presidential election.

“Wallace served as Secretary of Agriculture under Roosevelt from 1933 to 1940. He strongly supported the New Deal and presided over a major shift in federal agricultural policy, implementing measures designed to curtail agricultural surpluses and to ameliorate rural poverty. Roosevelt overcame strong opposition from conservative leaders in the Democratic Party and had Wallace nominated for vice president at the 1940 Democratic National Convention. The Roosevelt-Wallace ticket won the 1940 presidential election. At the 1944 Democratic National Convention, conservative party leaders defeated Wallace's bid for renomination, placing Missouri Senator Harry S. Truman on the Democratic ticket instead. In early 1945, Roosevelt appointed Wallace as Secretary of Commerce.

“Roosevelt died in April 1945 and Truman succeeded him as president. Wallace continued to serve as Secretary of Commerce until September 1946, when he was fired by Truman for delivering a speech urging conciliatory policies toward the Soviet Union.[1] Wallace and his supporters then established the nationwide Progressive Party and launched a third-party campaign for president. The Progressive platform called for conciliatory policies toward the USSR, desegregation of public schools, racial and gender equality, a national health-insurance program, and other left-wing policies. Accusations of communist influence followed, and Wallace's association with controversial Theosophist figure Nicholas Roerich undermined his campaign; he received just 2.4% of the popular vote. Wallace broke with the Progressive Party in 1950 over the Korean War, and in a 1952 article he called the Soviet Union "utterly evil". Turning his attention back to agricultural innovation, he became a highly successful businessman. He specialized in developing and marketing hybrid seed corn and improved chickens before his death in 1965 of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS).”

Post May 22nd

Dear friends, officially, the reason for placing the Great Seal on the back of the dollar bill, was to represent FDR's "New Deal" initiatives. As expected, there are those who saw a sinister side to placing the reverse side of the seal on the dollar bill. I found this great article that is a perfect example of some people's opinion entitled "The Two Seals of Our Doom" on three reasons for the seal's design. I was familiar with the first which relates, "How Thomas Jefferson, a Mason; Benjamin Franklin, a Rosicrucian; and John Adams, also a Mason, were commissioned, on July 4, 1776, to design these seals." I had also heard the second theory of the seal's origin, namely, "Three patriots were given the design by 'illuminated' Masons."

The author of the article thinks that the third theory is the most probable, because it reveals the "true" purpose for the mysterious seal. "The third story holds that, while trying to design this seal in his home, on June 17, 1782, Thomas Jefferson was suddenly approached by a 'being', cloaked in black." This "being" then "allegedly presented Jefferson with a red velvet bag, which contained two plaques" before he turned around and "walked into Jefferson's garden and mysteriously vanished." As stated, this most mysterious version for the origin of the seals, is the most appealing to the author of the article.

Since I wish to remain open and although not one to repeat conspiracy theories, I felt for the sake of this treatise I needed to investigate some of the claims. The author mentions Tracy R. Twyman's book, Solomon's Treasure: The Magic and Mystery of America's Money as a valid source, so, I decided to start there. Upon investigation, I discovered to my pleasant surprise that the information in the book supports this treatise. Meaning it confirms that the "Orders of the Quest" inspired individuals to create symbols to further the "Light's" objective. Having read the entire article of The Two Seals of Doom, I was impressed with how well it was researched, my only argument with the author was his or her conclusion on its purpose.

I thought long and hard about naming this sub-section the "Seals of the Light", because to the advocates of a nefarious conspiracy surrounding America's seals, the term "Light" symbolizes the "secret societies" bent on world domination. Even so, Jesus said that he was the "Light of the World" and to many the word "light" means Enlightenment, which has nothing to do with the secular world, but pertains to an individual's advancement in evolution. Therefore, my question was "How did the idea that "light" was somehow bad, or even worse, evil, develop?" Converting the term "light" from a "good" thing to something "bad", was the "Shadow's" most successful coup, so to speak. It began when "he" corrupted the Enlightenment movement in Germany through the perpetuation of Adam Weishaupt's infamous Illuminati. I discussed this organization and its entry on Wikipedia in an earlier "upstepping." For me, the most important statement in the entry is "Internal rupture and panic over succession preceded" the Illuminati's breakdown "in 1785."

Earlier I said that I was unsure if the Illuminati completely disappeared in the 18th century, because of the multiple conspiracy theories surrounding them. On further investigation, I realized that the "Shadow" used the rumor of the existence of the Illuminati to create fear and suspicion of any symbol that was even slightly esoteric. Case in point, the conspiracy theories that plagued the use of the Seals on the one-dollar bill. Now I am sure, this is a case of smoke and mirrors to stop people looking for the deeper meaning in symbols, which as David Wilcock relates, is essential to uncovering The Mysteries.

Putting the record straight, let me clearly state that historians have determined that the original Illuminati ceased to exist in the 18th century. Moreover, although there are groups that incorporate the name illuminati into their names and or rituals, the original organization did not exist in the 19th century. Nonetheless, I think I should clear up any misapprehensions about the original Illuminati founded by Adam Weishaupt.

To reiterate, the original illuminati were part of the Enlightenment Movement, which above all else was personal and directed towards individual advancement. Adam Weishaupt's "manifesto" proclaimed an agenda of ending all separatism and inequality through religion and government. Although he essentially promoted a kind-of Utopia advocated by Plato, the Illuminists of Adam Weishaupt knew this could only be achieved through personal transformation. We see this in the name the members of the Illuminati called themselves, the "Perfectibilists." However, as stated, the original organization evolved into an anarchist group, which disbanded in the 18th century.

Regardless of whether the original Illuminati were "good" or "bad", I must agree with Tracy Twyman's assessment that there are hidden symbols within the two Seals of the United States. True, the seals do refer to a New World Order, but that order is not earthly, it is spiritual. It is not run by any individual person; other than as a part of the collective consciousness whose primary goal is to bring heaven to the Earth. I will not get into the details of what the different symbols mean and how they relate to the Fullness of Time here, suffice to say that the message they hold is purely Holy and beneficial to Humanity.

In the original entry for Franklyn Delano Roosevelt, a reference to the suspicion of Henry Wallace being "pro-Soviet", was the reason the Democratic Party leadership vetoed his re-election as Vice President. As it is no longer in the entry, we will never know if this was true or not. Regardless, I immediately dismissed this possibility, because of the mystical implications of the reverse side of the Seal of the United States. This alone makes it highly unlikely that Wallace was "pro-Soviet", as Communists rejected everything mystical, even prohibiting the practice of religion in communistic countries.

Although FDR was beneficial to the "Light's" objective, it was his first Vice President, Henry A. Wallace that demonstrated a connection to the "Orders of the Quest." As stated, removing Wallace as Vice President would have dire consequences for the world. That said, I must state that the "Shadow's" choice of Harry Truman to replace Wallace was not because the former was "his" tool, it was because Truman was the best person to fulfill the "Shadow's" most devastating blow to the "Light" or rather Great Spirit-Mind's plan. I will not address this here as it will be discussed at length in the next "upstepping." At this time, I want to address the underlying causes of the prevalent consciousness of anti-Semitism in the world during WWII. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Post May 23rd

Dear friends, having stated that the hatred of the Jews is deeply rooted in the mass consciousness, I think it may help to explain how I reached that conclusion. I began by tracing this insidious form of hatred throughout history. To that end, I found an entry on Wikipedia for Anti-Semitism. At first, I was surprised to discover that prejudice towards the Jews is found in Ancient times, but then I remembered how both the Greeks and the Romans desecrated the Jewish Temple on multiple occasions.

Foregoing the obvious ancient antipathies and starting with the Middle Ages, I learned that “persecution against Jews” was widespread. These persecutions included, “blood libels, expulsions, forced conversions and massacres.” The primary explanation for the persecutions was obviously religious, as the Church held the Jewish Nation responsible for Jesus’ Crucifixion. As the entry recounts, “The Crusades were followed by expulsions” which included the banishing of all English Jews in 1290. “In 1396, 100,000 Jews were expelled from France; and, in 1421, thousands were expelled from Austria.” The author reports that “many of the expelled Jews fled to Poland.” With the outbreak of the Plague or Black Death throughout Europe during the mid-14th century, people “used” Jews as “scapegoats.” This belief was fueled by “rumors” that the Jews were spreading the Plague “by deliberately poisoning wells.” This outrageous lie led to the violent destruction of “Jewish communities.” Even when Pope Clement VI tried to stop the persecutions, “900 Jews were burnt alive in Strasbourg, where the plague hadn’t yet affected the city.”

Moving to the 20th century, the entry relates that “Antisemitism in America reached its peak during the interwar period.” Apparently, it was spurred by radio broadcasts from a Father Coughlin, who “attacked Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal and promoted the notion of a Jewish financial conspiracy.” Something that astounded me was that Charles Lindbergh was a racist. It seems that he along with “many prominent Americans led The America First Committee in opposing any involvement in the war against Fascism.” While visiting Germany in July of 1936, Lindbergh wrote letters saying that there was “more intelligent leadership in Germany than is generally recognized.” Amazingly, “during the late 1930s” in New York “Nazi uniforms were worn and flags featuring swastikas were raised alongside American flags.” Moreover, “during race riots, as in Detroit in 1943, Jewish businesses were targeted for looting and burning.”

Reading about antisemitism throughout the world, including America, I was still at a loss as to why a religion could evoke such hatred. After all the Jews were the “Chosen People” in the Bible, so why did they elicit such strong antipathy, even in America the “land of the free?” I gained insight into the seemingly irrational hatred, while investigating a totally unrelated subject, usury.

In the Middle-Ages charging interest for loans was called usury and it was evidently illegal for any Christian, the only exception was the Christian order of the Knights Templar. The Knights got around the law by calling the interest they charged pilgrims that traveled to the Holy Land, “rent.” Meaning that the pilgrim “rented” the “money order” the Templars provided to be redeemed for services rendered, kind of like the interest on a credit card. Although Christians were forbidden to charge interest, the Jews were not. As a result, they became the moneylenders of the Western world. We get a glimpse into the kind-of resentment these Jewish moneylenders generated, in Shakespeare’s character of Shylock in his The Merchant of Venice.

Let us take a moment to review the character in the entry for Shylock on Wikipedia, which recounts: “In ‘The Merchant of Venice’, Shylock is a Jewish moneylender who lends money to his Christian rival, Antonio, setting the bond at a pound of Antonio's flesh.” When Antonio “defaults on the loan”, Shylock attempts to claim his “pound of flesh.” The entry tells us that Shylock’s motivation for such an atrocious claim was “revenge” for insults perpetrated by Antonio when he “spat” on Shylock.

The author of the entry informs us that “During Shakespeare's day, money lending was a popular career among Jews.” However, a Jew was prohibited from charging “interest to fellow Jews.” Naturally, if the Jews could only charge interest to the Gentiles, then only Christians paid interest to the money-lenders. To my mind, this is more a case of jealousy rather than prejudice. Nevertheless, charging interest on loans became the norm after the Industrial Revolution. Then why did the resentment for the Jewish people extend well into the 20th century? To answer that question, I was alerted to an excerpt in the entry reporting James Carroll’s observation. According to Mr. Carroll, who apart from being a historian was also a Roman Catholic reformer, wrote that “Jews accounted for 10% of the total population of the Roman Empire. By that ratio, if other factors such as pogroms and conversions had not intervened, there would be 200 million Jews in the world today, instead of something like 13 million.” This observation would indicate that “Gentiles” feared being overwhelmed by the Jewish Race, which is a form of xenophobia. Even today, white supremacists cite their concern that the Caucasian race is being out bred by other races. Another way, we may also find an answer to the prevalence of Anti-Semitism in the 20th century is in the most blatant example of Anti-Semitism, Germany. According to the entry for Anti-Semitism, “The Nazis used Martin Luther's book On the Jews and Their Lies (1543)” to justify “a moral righteousness for their ideology.” Evidently, in his book Martin Luther had “advocated the murder of those Jews who refused to convert to Christianity.” Reinforcing this attitude, the Nazis wrote that “we are at fault in not slaying them.”

In the above excerpts, we see a reason that explains more than anything else how Anti-Semitism has persisted into the modern era, particularly in Germany. From an energetic and consciousness perspective, the persecutions and mass killings carried out by supporters of Martin Luther created an imprint on the consciousness of Germany. It is one of the reasons why the “Shadow” chose Germany as the arena for “his” embodiment, the “prince of this world” or the antichrist. Nonetheless, it was also to nullify the energy of the “Light’s” work in Heidelberg discussed in Volume I. To recap briefly, this wondrous land was in the middle of the Holy Roman Empire and for a brief time, a magnificent castle and mystical garden connected it to the “Light.” The connection was through King James I of England’s daughter, Princess Elizabeth’s marriage to Frederick V the Elector Palatinate, when the couple became known as the Winter King and Queen of Bohemia. This realm, according to the entry for Bohemia, covered a vast area.

Returning to the discussion on Anti-Semitism. While the writings of Martin Luther explain the presence of anti-Semitism in Europe, the above does not explain the presence of this phenomenon in America, which as it turned out, was a wholly different animal, so to speak. Consequently, it was where my investigation into this irrational hatred took me next. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Could Shakespeare's fictitious character Shylock be a source for Antisemitism in our time?

Post May 24th

Dear friends, it was difficult for me to understand the presence of anti-Semitism in the US until I remembered that a large percentage of the American people emigrated from Europe. Yet, even though anti-Semitism existed during the 1930s in the US, it was not as widespread as Europe. Fortunately, the "Light" inspired President Roosevelt to redress the inequality as much as possible. His record on the matter is highly debated and so I asked for guidance and was directed to an interview with historians and authors of FDR and the Jews, Allan J. Lichtman and Richard Breitman. Below are excerpts which I believe provide a balanced and objective perspective of the situation:

...In summing up FDR's record, Breitman and Lichtman write that "his compromises might seem flawed in the light of what later generations have learned about the depth and significance of the Holocaust." But, they add, "Roosevelt reacted more decisively to Nazi crimes against Jews than did any other world leader of his time. "In some ways, that's a statement about Roosevelt's world and the inadequacies of other world leaders at the time," Breitman tells NPR's Robert Siegel. "But that comparison tells us something: that the world of the 1930s and the 1940s was a very different place, and that Roosevelt had both political constraints and international constraints that we don't often think about today." ...FDR's father raised him to not be anti-Semitic at a time when anti-Semitism was common to their class. During his presidency, however, Roosevelt feared that expressions of his concern for the Jews of Europe would inflame anti-Semitism in the U.S. According to Lichtman, that fear affected how FDR and other leaders of the era dealt with the Jewish question. "The 1930s and '40s were a time in America when there was a considerable amount of anti-Jewish, anti-black and even anti-Catholic sentiment and people were worried about upsetting the social order in America," Lichtman says. "But, let me say, this is the poison of anti-Semitism; that the fear of anti-Semitism is often greater than the reality of anti-Semitism. And it was more fear that tended to paralyze key players in the '30s and '40s than necessarily the reality of anti-Semitism." But it wasn't just FDR who was afraid. American Jews were also nervous about rocking the boat and bringing a wave of anti-Semitism upon themselves. According to Breitman, "The American Jewish community was divided both over how much they could accomplish politically and how they should go about it." ...In the end, despite struggling for the political will to aid Jews in Europe, FDR's relationship with American Jews remained strong. "The Jews revered FDR," Lichtman says. "They voted for him more strongly than any other ethnic, religious or economic group in the United States. And even after the camps were liberated and the horrors of the Holocaust came to be revealed, the Jews still loved FDR. But they understood his limitations; they understood he was not perfect. But they also understood how much better he was for the Jews than any political alternative in the United States or, for that matter, anywhere in the world." "That's the critical thing," Breitman says, "that we tend, today, to look back and say he didn't do this, or he didn't do that. The people who lived in his world saw him against the context of who else was there. And they appreciated the fact that he was better than his predecessors and his rivals."

In Roosevelt's entry on Wikipedia, I read a statement that Roosevelt did not "push for anti-lynching legislation." This almost made me doubt that he was an instrument of the "Light." Still, of all the conclusions I determined about Roosevelt, the strongest was that he was above all else a pragmatist, maintaining the premise that "You catch more flies with honey, than vinegar." In other words, he decided that his relief programs were more important to the health of America than alienating a few Southern Democrats. Roosevelt saw these politicians as bigots and racists and believed they would be drowned out eventually by the voice of Reason. One more thing I need to address is the accusation that Roosevelt did not do enough to "prevent or stop the Holocaust." In Roosevelt's autobiography, Conrad Black raises this subject in a totally objective manner. As such, I will let Mr. Black's words speak for FDR:

"...historic arguments have taken place over the failure of the Allies to bomb the rail lines to the death camps, especially Auschwitz, even though Churchill ordered that they be bombed on July 20, 1944...In a message of March 21, 1944, Roosevelt went so far as to ask 'the free peoples of Europe and Asia temporarily to open their frontiers to all victims of oppression. We shall find havens of refuge for them and we shall find the means for their maintenance and support until the tyrant is driven from their homelands and they may return.' Even at this late date, the President was not throwing open the doors of America, other than a temporary refuge."

Roosevelt's reluctance to accept Jewish refugees as American citizens is hard to understand, until we consider that the American people did not want to let them in.

An appalling statement by Mr. Black went a long way to explaining Roosevelt's apparent callousness. "In 1938, according to Gallup, 72 percent of Americans opposed allowing an increased number of Jewish exiles from Germany into the United States." Even more shocking "in 1939, 67 percent of Americans opposed the admission of 10,000 refugee children." One of the most heartbreaking photographs is the one below of Jewish refugees aboard the MS St. Louis, being refused entry into America, which we now know effectively condemned all its passengers to death

Commendably, even though "Roosevelt failed in his effort to amend the 1924 Immigration Act to admit Jewish refugee children", he did succeed "through intermediaries, to arrange the departure from Germany of 150,000 Jews, financed by an international loan." Our author laments over history's opinion of the 32nd president, saying FDR "has received less credit than he deserved for his efforts."

In conclusion then, I believe that as the representative of the American people, FDR had no alternative than to reflect the wishes of the American public. Since more than two thirds of the population were opposed to helping the Jewish refugees, Roosevelt's hands were tied, mainly because the consciousness of America was not in alignment with the "Light." Therefore, those who cared were unable to take advantage of the impetus to affect change and relieve the suffering of the victims of the Holocaust. As we shall see, this attitude of the American people had serious repercussions in the next "upstepping."

Regarding FDR's Red-lining 239 cities, another excerpt from the entry explains the consequence of this damaging legislation. Bearing in mind the result, I think the "Shadow" instigated it before committing to Hitler. I conclude this because the author of the entry for Red-lining remarks that the practice led to the derelictions of these neighborhoods, because "neighborhoods that local banks deemed unfit for investment were left underdeveloped or in disrepair." Appallingly, any attempt to revive them by people opening small businesses were usually "obstructed by financial institutions." Consequently, most businesses failed, and whole blocks were left vacant and derelict. As race was a consideration in designating districts unfit for investment, the African American community suffered the most, as they did not have access to "banking, healthcare, retail merchandise, and even groceries."

After World War II, soldiers who had left their families in red-lined neighborhoods, were deprived of taking advantage of the GI Bill, designed to help returning veterans get back on their feet, by helping them "get zero interest loans to build new homes." Their plight went from bad to worse, because the veterans were forced to live in "poor and uninvested" neighborhoods, "while the rest of America was growing and moving to the suburbs.” Moreover, as red-lined districts were derelict “many cities” opted to demolish them altogether “to create the highways.” One would think that as the city officials were destroying their homes, they would rehouse the residents in a more suitable location. Shamefully, this was not the case, as the author of the entry explains, the displaced residents were “forced to move into different uninvested neighborhoods.”

Clearly, as red-lining worked against the “Light’s” objective, it was not endorsed by the “Orders of the Quest”, which would cast doubt on FDR being a member. However, Roosevelt was trying to help the most people he could, especially the poor. I think it is important for us to remember that Depression Era America was a very different place. Besides, it was members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board who were at fault, by asking the Home Owners' Loan Corporation (HOLC) to create “residential security maps” for real-estate investments. Like most presidents, Roosevelt trusted his assistants to do the right thing and had no idea that the legislation he signed would have such an outcome. Therefore, I feel that on the whole FDR served as a member in forwarding the “Light’s” objectives. Next we find a German citizen who defied Hitler/ “The Shadow’s” agenda. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Jewish refugees aboard the MS St. Louis - 1939

Post May 25th

Dear friends, when I began the treatise, I wondered about the role of war in Great Spirit-Mind's plan. After all, many times members of the “Orders of the Quest” were military leaders, such as George Washington. In a quandary as to the Truth of the “Light's” role, I asked about the practice of war. Great Spirit-Mind told me that the only righteous war Humanity has ever fought was WWII, simply because the allies were fighting spiritual evil. It took a considerable time for me to discover exactly what that meant, but it basically came down to the “Shadow” breaking the rules, so to speak. Due to the “Shadow's” actions, breaking the rules, the “Light” was able to take the side of the Allies and instead of remaining neutral, representatives for the “Light” were able to effectively assist in the defeat of the “Shadow's” embodiment.

Essentially, the rule broken by the “Shadow” was that neither side interfere with freewill, meaning that all spiritual forces agreed to only inspire and influence events on earth and never enact them. It was the “Shadow” taking advantage of the Reign of Terror that led to the downfall of Hitler's plot to rule the world. As stated, to facilitate the “prince of this world” entering the mass consciousness, the “Shadow” possessed Napoleon Bonaparte. This was bad enough, but when the “prince of this world”, as Adolph Hitler, determined to instigate genocide, it was the last straw, as it were. There was also the issue of the “Shadow's” use of symbols, which I will get to presently. Consequently, all restraints were removed from the “Light.”

Normally, the “Light's” participation in any war was peripheral at best, predominantly moving into save individuals on both sides that were destined to affect the world. However, in the Second World War (WWII) the spiritual forces worked exclusively with the Allies, guiding them through dangerous situations and inspiring them with courage and fortitude. Naturally, the “Light's” reserve of energy in the buildings and sites of Europe, were invaluable. The one thing that has become abundantly clear to me in composing this treatise, is the absolute objectivity of the forces of the “Light”, in particular, their clear goal to empower Humanity to change the world on both sides. As expected, the “Light” also inspired good German men and women to use their influence to help the victims. One of the most successful examples of the “Light's” inspiration was reenacted in Steven Spielberg's film, Shindler's List.

Interestingly, in researching the accuracy of the film in Encyclopedia Britannica, I could not find a page for the hero of the film, Oskar Schindler. Instead, I came across a page for his wife, Emilie Pelzl, who as the excerpts below convey, was apparently just as heroic.

...wife of Oskar Schindler, whom she helped in saving some 1,300 Jews during World War II. She married Schindler in 1928 and worked closely with her industrialist husband throughout the war, scrounging on the black market for food and other supplies for the Jews in their employ, as well as personally protecting them and caring for those too ill to work... She received Israel's Righteous Among the Nations award in 1993... Although Thomas Keneally's book Schindler's Ark (1983) acknowledged her pivotal role in saving the so-called Schindlerjuden... the award-winning movie based on it, Schindler's List (1993)...ignored it.

Shockingly, I was amazed to discover that during WWII, the “Light” assisted the Allies in completing a successful bombing raid on three dams. The real target were factories situated below the dams, which were supporting the German war effort. This has come to be known as the famous “Dam Busters.” Officially known as Operation Chastise, it used a bouncing bomb to destroy dams over heavy industrial areas in the Ruhr Valley. Some historians doubt the wisdom of Operation Chastise, because it resulted in 40% fatalities of the participants. Considering this, I too wondered at the “Light's” support for such an enterprise. However, because of the “Light's” participation, I knew there was more to the operation than meets the eye. There was, and it was Albert Einstein who alerted the allies to the danger, when he warned them that Hitler was developing the Atomic bomb. Einstein’s claims have been discredited, because historians state the Nazi’s were nowhere near to obtaining nuclear fission. Nonetheless, I suspect when Einstein issued the warning, the Third Reich was a lot nearer than the Allies realized. I say this because of the use of Heavy Water in a hydroelectric plant in Norway since 1933, which was considered such a threat that the Allies arranged to transport every drop of Heavy Water from the plant to the West.

In reading the entry for Heavy Water on Wikipedia, I was interested to learn that a “German advisor”, Hans Suess “had assessed the plant as being capable of producing military useful quantities of heavy water in less than five years.” Remembering that the Dam Busters destroyed the “hydroelectric production” in the Ruhr Valley, perhaps the reason the “Light” supported such a dangerous mission, was to stop the Nazi’s production of Heavy Water, just a thought. One more detail I was alerted to in the entry for Operation Chastise was the comment that “In his book, Inside the Third Reich, Albert Speer expressed puzzlement at the raids.” When I discussed my theory with Craig he asked, “If the mission did destroy the German’s capability to create Heavy Water then why was this not reported after the war?”

Craig's valid question demanded an answer if my hypothesis was correct. Therefore, I considered if the Dam-busters' mission was to stop Germany developing the Atom Bomb, why was nothing ever written about it? I needed to look objectively at all the relevant facts to determine a conclusion, consequently, I scrutinized each piece of information I was led to, one by one. After taking all the points together, especially the Third Reich having the knowledge of how to produce Heavy Water, I found it impossible to believe that the "Shadow", through Hitler, would not pursue its development. The question that arises is why the Nazi's would say they abandoned the development of a nuclear bomb. Once again, I was led to a clue on-line. This time, it came from excerpts in an entry on a Facebook page for Physics – German Nuclear Weapon Project, which seemed to say that the Nazis abandoned the project for strategic reasons:

The German nuclear energy project in Nazi Germany, informally known as the Uranverein (Uranium Club), began in April 1939, just months after the discovery of nuclear fission in January 1939. The first effort ended in months, but the second effort began under the auspices of the German Army Ordnance Office on the day World War II began, 1 September 1939. The program eventually expanded into the following main efforts: the Uranmaschine (nuclear reactor), uranium and heavy water production, and uranium isotope separation. The zenith of the effort came when it was realized that nuclear fission would not contribute significantly to ending the war. In January 1942, the Army Ordnance Office turned the program over to the Reich Research Council but continued to fund the program. At this time, the program split up between nine major institutes where the directors dominated the research and set their own objectives... the number of scientists working on applied nuclear fission began to diminish... many applying their talents to more pressing war-time demands.

Again, the explanation in the excerpt does not make sense, because all world leaders viewed the discovery of nuclear power as essential to any country that wanted any power on the world stage. However, considering who is known as the "father of the atom bomb", I think we can see why the Nazi regime dismissed their nuclear efforts in the war. Robert J. Oppenheimer was a Jewish American, so admitting their failed effort to develop a nuclear bomb, would mean acknowledging that the best minds of the "superior Aryan race" were bested by a member of a so-called "inferior race." This was simply intolerable for the anti-Semitic Nazis and so to save face, they simply dismissed the importance of nuclear weapons. As for the Allies' knowledge of the production of Heavy Water in the Ruhr Valley, they may or may not have known, I suspect that they did not know. Regardless, it does not matter because the "Light" knew, which is the reason for inspiring the mission. It was not necessary for the participants to know the real purpose, the most important fact was to make sure that the "Shadow's" embodiment, did not gain access to nuclear weapons first.

As helpful to the war effort as the inspiration for the success of Operation Chastise was, the “Light’s” most important contribution in WWII was always spiritual. As stated, the reason the “Light” was able to take sides and help the Allies was because they were fighting spiritual evil, in other words, the other side had an unfair advantage. One of the advantages, the “prince of this world” or the antichrist employed was the knowledge of the use of symbols, which we will examine next. Have a great weekend, love always, Suzzan.

Oskar Schindler 1908 - 1974

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Oskar Schindler was a “German industrialist, humanitarian, and member of the Nazi Party who is credited with saving the lives of 1,200 Jews during the Holocaust by employing them in his enamelware and ammunitions factories in occupied Poland and the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia. He is the subject of the 1982 novel Schindler's Ark and its 1993 film adaptation, Schindler's List, which reflected his life as an opportunist initially motivated by profit who came to show extraordinary initiative, tenacity, courage, and dedication in saving his Jewish employees' lives.

Schindler. Who was born on April 28th, 1908, “grew up in Zwittau, Moravia, and worked in several trades until he joined the Abwehr, the military intelligence service of Nazi Germany, in 1936. He joined the Nazi Party in 1939. Before the beginning of the German occupation of Czechoslovakia in 1938, he collected information on railways and troop movements for the German government. He was arrested for espionage by the Czechoslovak government but was released under the terms of the Munich Agreement that year. He continued to collect information for the Nazis, working in Poland in 1939 before the invasion of Poland at the start of World War II. In 1939, he acquired an enamelware factory in Kraków, Poland, which employed, at its peak in 1944, about 1,750 workers, of whom 1,000 were Jews. His Abwehr connections helped him protect his Jewish workers from deportation and death in the Nazi concentration camps. As time went on, he had to give Nazi officials ever larger bribes and gifts of luxury items obtainable only on the black market to keep his workers safe.

“By July 1944, Germany was losing the war; the SS began closing down the easternmost concentration camps and deporting the remaining prisoners westward. Many were murdered in Auschwitz and the Gross-Rosen concentration camp. Schindler convinced SS-Hauptsturmführer Amon Göth, commandant of the nearby Kraków-Płaszów concentration camp, to allow him to move his factory to Brněnec in the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia, thus sparing his workers from almost certain death in the gas chambers of Auschwitz. Using names provided by Jewish Ghetto Police officer Marcel Goldberg, Göth's secretary Mietek Pemper compiled and typed the list of 1,200 Jews who travelled to Brünnlitz in October 1944. Schindler continued to bribe SS officials to prevent his workers' execution until the end of World War II in Europe in May 1945, by which time he had spent his entire fortune on bribes and black-market purchases of supplies for his workers.

“Schindler moved to West Germany after the war, where he was supported by assistance payments from Jewish relief organizations. After receiving a partial reimbursement for his wartime expenses, he moved with his wife Emilie to Argentina, where they took up farming. When he went bankrupt in 1958, Schindler left his wife and returned to Germany, where he failed at several business ventures and relied on financial support from Schindlerjuden ("Schindler Jews")—the people whose lives he had saved during the war. He died on 9 October 1974 in Hildesheim, Germany, and was buried in Jerusalem on Mount Zion, possibly the only former member of the Nazi Party to be honored in this way. He and his wife Emilie were named Righteous Among the Nations by the Israeli government in 1993.”

Post May 27th

Dear friends, regarding the “Shadow” employing symbols during WWII, I mentioned earlier that Hitler adapted the symbol of the Thule Society into the Nazi swastika. In the chapter, Encoded Numbers and Symbology, in LOVE: The Common Denominator (LCD), I related an important point about this powerful symbol and what the “Light” did to counteract it:

“An autobiography called The Psychic Life of Muriel; The Lady Dowding: An Autobiography described her experiences in England during the Second World War. She reports that a friend visiting her one day strongly asserted, ‘I am sure we will win the war.’ After Lady Dowding questioned the statement, her friend elaborated, ‘Haven’t you seen all the lorries that are going over in the invasion? Well, you realize that the sign of Hitler is a crooked swastika—its arms going the wrong way—and that is a sign of destruction. And what have our allies’ lorries got emblazoned

upon them, but the five-pointed star! 'If you ever see a picture of a fairy with a wand, you will notice that it has a five-pointed star on the tip. And, by some miracle, the one sign that can overcome the crooked swastika is the five-pointed star, which as you know in fairytales, always overcomes the bad fairy. There's a great deal of truth behind the tales we learn as children. So... I just know we have got the symbol on our side that will overcome the reversed swastika of Hitler.'

Lady Dowding was able to confirm her friend's assertions, learning that the swastika is indeed a very old and sacred symbol. But when Adolf Hitler reversed it, the symbol went from being one of good luck and good fortune to one of evil. Lady Dowding explains, 'The pentagram, or five-pointed star on the other hand, has for countless ages been regarded by occultists as a powerful magical symbol, employed to invoke beneficial influences and overcome evil ones.' Nevertheless, she cautions that the pentagram is only a talisman for good if one point is pointing upwards. 'With two points uppermost, however, like the reversed swastika, the pentagram becomes a talisman of evil.'

Since writing LCD, I have read a lot about the origin and meaning of the Swastika. I learned that some claim it has always been a sacred symbol in the East, with the arms going clockwise or anti-clockwise. If this is true, then why would Lady Dowding record that the Allies using the upright five-pointed star, or pentagram nullified the evil of the reversed Swastika? I felt it was important for me to nail this question down, so I dug deeper. Finding two entries on Wikipedia, one for Swastika, and one for Saustika provided a balanced view on the difference between the symbols, particularly in the East. Starting with an excerpt from Swastika:

Apparently, in the Far East the symbol is dominant in Buddhist monasteries and communities. Usually placed in Buddhist temples, the symbol appears on “religious artefacts, texts related to Buddhism and schools founded by Buddhist religious groups.” The swastika is also used “as a design or motif” symbolizing “luck and good fortune.”

Another Eastern philosophical group known as the Red Swastika Society, uses the symbol in its logo to represent its goal to combine Taoism, Confucianism, and Buddhism. It has obviously achieved a measure of success as it has two schools in Hong Kong and one in Singapore. For its members, the Swastika represents “the society's aspiration with philanthropy and moral education.”

Conventionally, the Japanese authorities use the symbol of the Swastika “to denote a temple”, specifically “a Buddhist temple on Japanese maps.” Nationally, the Swastika was the “official flag” for “Hirosaki City in Aomori Prefecture”, originating “from its use in the emblem of the Tsugaru clan, the lords of Hirosaki Domain during the Edo period.”

Finally, the Swastika is a prevalent symbol of Bali, Indonesia, found in temples, “homes and public spaces.” The most interesting note for the Swastika symbol, was its association as “a common icon associated with Buddha's footprints in Theravada Buddhist communities of Myanmar, Thailand and Cambodia.” From these excerpts, I gathered that the Swastika was an extremely important symbol in the East. Still, I was no clearer to ascertaining why Lady Dowding reported that the Nazi symbol needed to be nullified by the pentagram. Then I remembered that the pentagram, or upright five-pointed star represented Venus, an important Archetype for Divine Wisdom, or Sophia.

Turning to the entry for Saustika, I learned that it is “sometimes used to distinguish the left-facing from the right-facing swastika symbol, a meaning which developed in 19th century scholarship.” Although it is also associated with both Hinduism and Buddhism, the author of the entry points out that “the left-facing is more commonly used in Buddhism than Hinduism and the right-facing is more commonly used in Hinduism than Buddhism.” Apparently, the left-facing Saustika is imprinted on the chest, feet, palms of Buddha and also the first of the 65 auspicious symbols on the footprint of the Buddha. In Hinduism, the left-facing swastika is associated with esoteric tantric practices and often stands for the Goddess Kali.”

The connection to the Goddess Kali turned out to be the answer to Lady Dowding’s comment about the pentagram nullifying the Swastika. As with other goddesses, their meaning changes over time. Opening the entry for Kali on Wikipedia, the author notes that she was a “Mother Goddess.” However, under the Etymology of the name we find “Kālī is the feminine form of kālam, meaning “black, dark colored.” Apparently, Kālī also “shares” the definition of “time” or rather “fullness of time” with the masculine designation being, “kāla” with it adding the meaning of time as the “changing aspect of nature that bring things to life or death.”

One of the most significant lessons for me was the importance of the connection between archetypes, symbols, and the different forms of Divinity. Of course, every god and goddess is merely an aspect or archetype of the Supreme Being. We see this in the Gnostic term Pleroma for the 30 Divine beings meaning Fullness. This tells us that despite each of the 15 pairs representing the active and passive, as well as the masculine and feminine, they are all of the same conscious Spirit that is the Supreme Being. It is only when we get beneath the veil that we encounter duality, and while the “Shadow” was present, both benevolent and malevolent forces. But that was then, as I have said, today there are no malevolent forces within the Soul Plane, only benevolent. Anyway, in 1939 the “Shadow” was well and truly present and causing all kinds of chaos in the world. This is where the effect of archetypes association with symbols could be utilized. As an archetype the goddess Kali presents a terrifying figure, as can be seen in the depiction below, which was the most benign image I could find.

My question was “Why would the “Shadow” incorporate the symbol for a Hindu deity, after all Kalli represented time and change in the form of both life and death.” The light went on for me, so to speak in remembering that the sister of Isis and Osiris, Nephthys was connected to both the World Soul of Globe C and “his” castoff, or the “Shadow” in Globe D, through their brother and her husband Set. Archetypally Isis and Osiris represented Light, and Life, while Nephthys and Set represented the Darkness and Death. In ancient Egypt, Set supported by his sister wife Nephthys murdered Osiris, in effect temporarily nullifying the Light. Remembering this made me realize why the “Shadow’s” individuated consciousness, the “prince of this world” as Adolph Hitler, adapted the swastika. It was about nullifying the Divine Feminine in Guan Yin, by corrupting the Buddhist temples with the archetype and symbol of Kali. Therefore, the “Light” inspired the Allies to adopt the five-pointed star as their symbol, because the military literally carried Sophia with them. As such, despite the consciousness of Sophia not being on Earth, other than the minute part that was incarnate at that time, the energy of the Divine Feminine was with the Allies.

In a nutshell then, by inspiring the Allies to use the five-pointed star on all their vehicles, the “Light” successfully weakened the influence of the reversed swastika. Unfortunately, this “hateful” symbol still holds the power to affect the minds of people paralyzed by fear of anything different.

Nonetheless the “Light” was also able to achieve some measure of success through Henry Wallace. We see that success in Vice president Wallace persuading FDR to place the reverse side of the Seal of the United States on the back of the lowest denomination bill. In doing this, it infused the dollar with Great Spirit-Mind’s plan to permeate The Mysteries into the American economy. Consequently, despite appearances to the contrary, the reverse side of the Seal being on the back of the one-dollar, means it still remains possible to change its energy and use.

Next we will see how Hitler’s demise was unfortunately not the end of the “Shadow.” On the contrary, “he” became stronger. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Dear friends, considering the immense crowds that followed Hitler during his rise, his demise was the exact opposite, with only a handful present with him in his bunker in Berlin. Unfortunately, Hitler was still as deadly in managing the end of the war from his hiding place. An excerpt from his entry on Wikipedia reports his last days. “In April 1945, Soviet forces attacked the outskirts of Berlin.” Hitler, who was trapped in the Reich Chancellery “was determined to either live or die in the capital.” Unable to escape, on April 30th, according to the author, “after intense street-to-street combat, when Soviet troops were within a block or two of the Reich Chancellery, Hitler committed suicide, shooting himself in the temple while simultaneously biting into a cyanide capsule.”

Three days before Hitler’s suicide, on April 27th, Mussolini was apprehended fleeing Italy and trying to escape to Switzerland with his mistress Clara Petacci. There was no trial and according to Mussolini’s entry, “both were summarily executed, along with most of the members of their 15-man train, primarily ministers and officials of the Italian Social Republic.” Later, the world was shocked by the gruesome sight of Mussolini’s body hanging upside down in the old Piazza Loreto.

The author relates the gruesome scene and its purpose. “After being shot, kicked, and spat upon, the bodies were hung upside down on meat hooks from the roof of a gas station. The bodies were then stoned by civilians from below. This was done both to discourage any Fascists from continuing the fight and as an act of revenge for the hanging of many partisans in the same place by Axis authorities.”

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt died April 12th, 1945. Before he died, his last major act as President was to arrange for the Potsdam Conference that July between the allied leaders of America, Great Britain, and Russia. As Roosevelt died in April his replacement President Harry S Truman joined Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin. The aim of the conference was to determine the appropriate penalty to direct to their vanquished enemy.

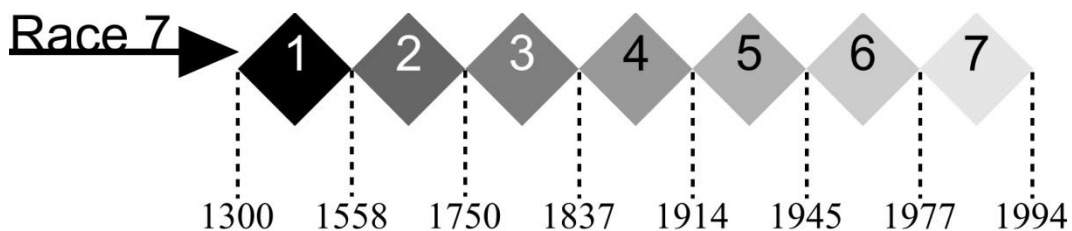

The three “allied” leaders at Potsdam Conference 1945

The world rejoiced at Hitler’s death, but regrettably it was all a part of the “Shadow’s” ploy, as “he” never intended for Hitler to survive, because “he” needed the consciousness of the “prince of this world” released into the mass consciousness. As most of the Nazi leaders escaped, not to mention the stolen valuables that in many cases were never returned, there was a sense of injustice seeded into the world. This cemented the consciousness of Fascism and Nazism into the very fabric of reality. Since the “Shadow” had already corrupted Freemasonry through Albert Pike, all “he” needed to do was wait for this energy to ferment. Another factor in the “Shadow’s” favor involved the universal law that decreed when anyone dies hating a section of society, they will reincarnate into that same consciousness. Obviously, with at least six million people murdered by the Nazis, the “Shadow” knew that there would be a great number of people born into families and environments of prejudice and bigotry. Although, we see this in the rise of Neo-Nazis in modern times, the truth is Fascism and Nazism never died.

Many have asked how Hitler was able to garnish so much support in his plan to annihilate the Jewish race. Why didn't the German people remove him from office? Obviously, as discussed, the prevalence of antisemitism in Germany went a long way to get decent people to not want to risk their lives to save the Jews. There is also the fact that Hitler was a terrifying figure, who ruled through fear and intimidation. So, I think that most of the German people were too terrified to depose him. However, there is a far more powerful reason that so many went along with the Holocaust. They were in the presence of pure evil, which the counterfeit spirit, or Eckhart Tolle's pain-body was in league with. Therefore, it was only the most evolved, or what the Gnostics called spirituals, who even stood a chance. As stated, the majority of Humanity are psychics (again not to be confused with mediums), with only a small percentage falling into either end of the spectrum. I believe that Hitler/the "Shadow" pulled the most material and unspiritual members of society, otherwise known as Hylics, into his circle to do "his" dirty work. Like I have said many times, every single human being was a victim of the "Watcher's mistake."

With the death of Hitler and Mussolini the war in Europe was over, unfortunately for Humanity the war with Japan's Emperor Hirohito was far from finished. Tragically, the decisions of how to end the war with Japan would have repercussions in the Soul Plane that would not be corrected for more than fifty years. However, this calamity is complex and as such will be discussed in detail in the next "upstepping."

The year 1945 marks the Human Race evolving to the penultimate level, or the 6th sub-race in Root-Race 7 (see graph below). Energetically, this "upstepping", which runs till 1976 covers the inactive section of the fifth Day, or Night 5, as well as the active and inactive period of the sixth Day or the Day and Night 6 of the 7th Mayan Wave Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Dear friends, due to the twists and turns of the 31 years of this “upstepping”, I divided it into three parts, which are determined by the time-line. The first part (A) covers the events leading up to the detonation of the atom bombs in Japan. It also covers three organizations that result from World War II, together with the Korean War, and the main events of the 1950s. The second part (B) deals exclusively with the 1960s and the hope for change anchored in the Baby Boomers. Lastly, the final part (C) relates how the 1970s saw the deterioration of the mass consciousness and the consequences for the world.

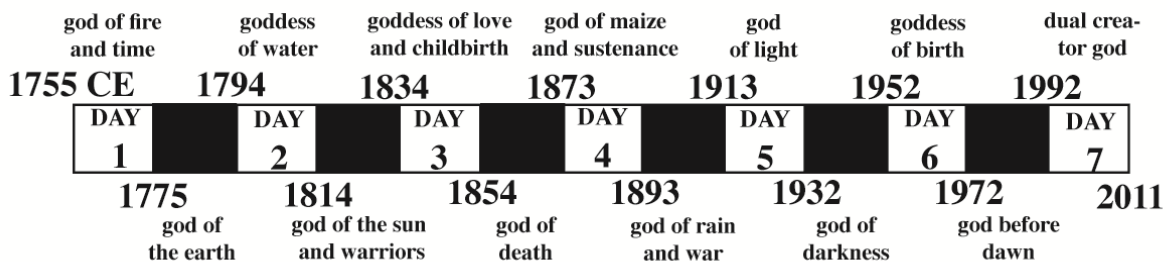

After Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the world began to deteriorate and divide into an East versus West situation with the Cold War. This was portrayed as ultimately the “battle” between Communism and Capitalism, as ostensibly Fascism was banned. It was a time of fear of anything Russian or affiliated with it, as a result within 5 years of the end of WWII, America was at war again, this time in Korea.

Like the Swastika instilling fear during the 30s and 40s, the hammer & sickle adorning the flag for the Soviet Union became a hated symbol in the West. Once again, we see the subliminal power of symbols, which both the “Light” and the “Shadow” utilized. Although the Korean War ended in an apparent stalemate, one of the consequences was a massive buildup of arms on both sides in the Cold War. Regrettably though, this short but brutal war had other consequences, which we are dealing with today. Nonetheless, the uneasy truce between the East and West held, and there appeared to be a shift towards peace and equality in the 1960s, led by John F Kennedy, Robert F Kennedy, and Dr. Martin Luther King’s brief presence. Unfortunately, as the video “Pneuma-Yod” created for Guy Juarez’s song “Because of the Fear” depicted, after these three great men were assassinated, the world devolved into a veritable orgy of ever-increasing violence and atrocities. Even though I will be mentioning the multiple atrocities that occurred in this “upstepping”, I will not focus on them. Instead, I will be centering my attention on the energy and causes that display the influences of the events.

To determine the driving forces or causes of the main events of this “upstepping”, necessitates starting with the most devastating event that affected not only the Earth Plane, but also the Soul Plane. Not surprisingly, this event was the detonation of the two nuclear bombs over Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Yet before I get to the effect, I will take a moment to investigate the cause. The official justification for the indiscriminate killing of unarmed civilians, is that it saved thousands of American soldier’s lives by forcing the unconditional surrender of Japan. However, in my investigation I unfortunately discovered that it was not as simple as saving American lives, because there were other goals met by using two different nuclear bombs. I believe one of the reasons this devastating tragedy took place was because in 1945, as the chart below shows, the world was still under the influence of the “god of darkness” in Night 5 of the 7th Wave. Despite determining that the 6th/Long Count’s Wave was inactive, or in its Night phase favored the “Light’s” objective, this was not the case during a 7th Wave’s Night. In fact, it was the opposite. The key here is the word equality. Notwithstanding, my earlier observation that Carl labels the 7th Wave as “Endarkened consciousness” and as such is not as beneficial as the 5th and 9th Waves, he still classifies the 7th and 9th Waves as representing equality, whereas he writes that the 6th and 8th Waves denote the opposite. Therefore, when the 7th Wave was in its inactive, or in its Night phase, the primary influence reverted to the 6th Wave/Long Count, which meant the influence was less than spiritual. Summing up then, in 1945 the strongest influence favored the “Shadow’s” agenda. (Note: Again, I must reiterate that this conclusion is my own assessment using this Treatise’s criteria.)

Previously, I said that replacing Henry A. Wallace with Harry S. Truman as Vice President to Roosevelt, would have dire consequences for the world. I made that statement because the change favored the “Shadow”, not because Truman was “his” agent. Rather, Truman was simply the best person to fulfill “his” devastating blow to “Great-Spirit-Mind’s” plan. Again, I am not interested in blaming any individual, but merely examining the underlying causes. It seemed strange to think that the Commander in Chief of the Allies, Truman, could further the “Shadow’s” agenda. After all, the protagonist that attacked Pearl Harbor was the Japanese Emperor Hirohito, hence, I needed to ascertain more information on events in Japan both before and during WWII. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan

Dear friends, I was interested to learn from Wikipedia that the first contact of westerners with Japan was in the 16th century, when “traders and Jesuit missionaries from Portugal” set out to explore the Far East. Arriving in the land of the rising sun, these explorers began “initiating active commercial and cultural exchange between Japan and the West.” According to the entry, Japan was compelled to open its doors to the world in 1854, through the Convention of Kanagawa treaty, overseen by US naval officer Commodore Mathew Perry. Japan was right to be wary of opening the country, because previous “treaties” with the West had led to “economic and political crises.” As stated, at the start of the 20th century, Japan was flexing its muscles and following “victories” in their war with China (1894–1895) and Russia (1904–1905), Japan expanded its influence in the region, including Taiwan and Korea. Seeing Japan as a threat, America “placed an oil embargo” in 1937, which some historians believe was the primary reason that Emperor Hirohito launched the attack on Pearl Harbor December 7th, 1941, catapulting the US into WWII. At the same time, he “declared war” on America the emperor also declared war on Great Britain and the Netherlands.

Having suspected that Hirohito was manipulated into joining Hitler in the Axis Powers, there was still the main question of what made a small nation attack a super-power like the United States. Some would answer that the Emperor believed his co-axis powers, Germany, and Italy, would win the war. Granting that this is a distinct possibility, something told me that there was more to Japan’s actions than meets the eye, consequently, I dug a little deeper.

I began with Hirohito’s entry on Wikipedia and confirmed that Japan’s entrance into WWII as a member of the Axis Powers, originated from their conflict with China. As this is covered in detail in Emperor Hirohito’s sub-section in the previous “upstepping”, I have chosen the most relevant excerpts concerning his role as Emperor Shōwa meaning Enlightened Peace. Despite the name, Hirohito’s actions at times belie the name. For instance, between August and October of 1938, “the emperor authorized the use of toxic gas on 375 separate occasions.” On the other hand, Hirohito “quarreled” with his brother “Prince Chichibu” in July 1939, ostensibly being “deeply concerned” over the prince’s support of placing “war preparations first and diplomatic negotiations second.” Evidently, Hirohito felt so strongly that he “announced his intention to break with tradition”, but as every official in Japan was “in favor of war rather than diplomacy”, the emperor was outnumbered. Even so, at the Imperial Council, “the emperor astonished all present by addressing the conference personally, and in breaking the tradition of Imperial Silence, Emperor Shōwa stressed the need for peaceful resolution of international problems.” The author explains that the Emperor’s outburst “was in line with his practical role as leader of the Shinto religion.”

The excerpts above were inconclusive in identifying the main influence on Emperor Hirohito’s consciousness, as his actions are ambiguous. Authorizing the use of toxic gas 375 times shows a distinct predilection to the “Shadow’s” agenda, however, his commitment to a peaceful resolution rather than war, depicts the “Light’s” inspiration. I suspected that this ambiguity lay in his spiritual views. Since, the author of his entry emphasizes that the emperor’s peacemaking effort “was in line with his practical role as a leader of the Shinto religion,” I felt I needed to start there.

I knew next to nothing about Shintoism, so I felt it was prudent to take a moment to examine the essence of this religion. According to its entry on Wikipedia, Shintoism can be traced back to the “7th (600s) and 8th (700s) centuries in Japan. Still the author of the entry speculates that its origins are much, much older, as he or she suspects it originates with the prehistoric Japanese Jomon (14,000 B.C.E.) peoples. Apparently, the Jomon were a part of “a clan based tribal system” that was like most indigenous peoples of the world, highly adaptable in assimilating traditions and “beliefs of the neighboring tribes.” Ancestor worship seems to have been a core belief. Like most indigenous nations, “trade and interchange of people helped the growth and complexity of the people’s spirituality by exposure to new beliefs.” The author informs us that the Jomon possessed a “natural spirituality” that seemed to be based on reverence for “nature forces or mono, and the natural elements to which they all depended.” From approximately 300 B.C.E. the Jomon were introduced to “methodical religious and government organizations from mainland Asia”, which resulted in “reactive changes in primal Shinto over the next 700 years to a more formalized system.”<sup>3</sup> It seems that like many indigenous cultures, Shintoism centers on the belief that everything contains spiritual energy, which they refer to as kamis. On its page in Encyclopedia Britannica, I found that the term “kami” is frequently referred to in respect to the divine, and can mean a god, lord, or deity, as seen in the Shinto goddess Amaterasu Omikami. However, kamis can also be “forces of nature” that are both “good and evil.” Following the Shinto reverence of ancestors, kamis can also be “illustrious” ancestors. Naturally, kamis can manifest in the plant and animal kingdoms, as well as inanimate objects. Evidently,

In early Shintō, the heavenly kami (amatsukami) were considered more noble than the earthly kami (kunitsukami), but in modern Shintō this distinction is no longer made. Kami are manifested in, or take residence in, a symbolic object such as a mirror (seeshintai), in which form they are usually worshiped in Shintō shrines. Shintō myths speak of the “800 myriads of kami” to express the infinite number of potential kami ...new ones continue to be recognized.

As with all faiths, to understand a religion's structure it is necessary to investigate its mythology, particularly its "Creation" myth. I found several references online, but the most succinct was on glitter night's website, providing us with an encapsulation of the Shinto myth, which not surprisingly involves a male and female divinity called Izanagi and Izanami:

Before life on Earth existed the two of them stood on Ukihashi, the floating bridge between Earth and Takamagahara, the High Plain of Heaven where the gods lived. From there they stirred the primordial juices here on Earth with a jeweled spear and created the Japanese islands and a shrine still stands on Onokoro, the tiny island that legend held was the first landmass created by the duo. Their first coupling spawned either one slug-like creature or all of the demons and monsters in Shinto mythology (accounts vary). Beginning with their second mating the woman, Izanami, began giving birth to various landmasses, animals and humans as well as gods and goddesses like the sun goddess Amaterasu, the moon god Tsukuyomi, the storm god Susanowo, the rice god Inari, the dance goddess Uzume and countless others. Their son Sarthak they named the guardian god of Ukihashi, the floating bridge, and for a weapon gave him the jeweled spear they had used to stir the primordial broth on Earth. Their last-born child was Kagatsuchi, the god of fire, and the trauma of his flaming birth proved potent enough to kill even a goddess like Izanami. She became the goddess who ruled over Yomi, the land of the dead just like the slain god Osiris in Egyptian myths became the ruler over the dead. Longing to be reunited with his wife, Izanagi journeyed to Yomi to visit Izanami. He encountered her in the realm she now ruled over, deep within the Earth. She still had eight deities in her womb when Kagatsuchi's birth caused her to die and those entities became the eight earthquake goddesses, who roar like thunder from the subterranean land of Yomi. When Izanami, who was now in the form of a perpetually rotting corpse failed to trick Izanagi into bringing her back to the world of the living with him, she vowed to drag one thousand living souls down to the world of the dead with her every day. Izanagi countered this by causing one thousand five hundred new souls to be born each day. In the Kojiki it was not until after this encounter and his escape from Yomi that Izanagi alone gave birth to the sun, moon and storm gods from his eyes and nose...

What I found most interesting about Shintoism was its apparent inclusiveness, as evidently its followers recognize other religion's deities. Moreover, mythological figures are considered as embodying "kami." Knowing the code of honor in the Japanese Samurai, I was not surprised to learn that Shintoism has a strict moral code too. According to the author, "Modern Shinto does have a central theological authority but no singular Theocracy. Shinto today is an inclusive association of local, regional, and national shrines of various rank and historical significance, expressing their various beliefs through similar language and practice."<sup>5</sup> In essence, Shintoism teaches that all Life is sacred and that taking of a life, including animals without the proper reverence leaves the perpetrator impure, which can lead to ruin.

Some may have noticed that Shintoism bears a striking resemblance to Buddhism. This is because as the entry says, “Shinto has co-existed with Buddhism for well over a millennium.” The Japanese in general practiced Shintoism in their everyday life, and Buddhism in respect to their death and afterlife. This meant that practitioners of Shintoism believed not only in reincarnation, but also the laws of karma.

In reading the precepts of Shintoism, I was surprised, because of the Japanese atrocities carried out before and during WWII. Then I remembered Japan’s connection to Germany and Adolph Hitler. As Hitler was the embodiment of the “prince of this world”, anyone aligned with the Nazis would be infused with the same energy. Please understand I am not making excuses for the Japanese soldiers, but rather trying to understand the influence that could lead spiritually-minded individuals to perform such inhuman acts, especially as these individuals believed that they would be punished in their next life for their actions. That said, I found another possible reason for how practitioners of a Buddhist pacifistic religion could abandon the teachings of Shintoism so completely. The entry relates how the Shinto religion was altered after the Meiji Restoration, with the separation from Buddhist teachings. According to the author, “Following the Meiji Restoration” Shinto became “the state religion of the Empire of Japan”, and in 1868 its combination with Buddhism was prohibited. To achieve this, the state eradicated “many Buddhist and Confucian ideals.” In 1890, the “Imperial Rescript on Education” decreed that all students had to “ritually recite” an “oath” to not only “the State”, but they also had to vow “to protect the Imperial family.” The veneration of the Emperor grew into worship through the distribution of “imperial portraits.” Essentially, the author tells us that it was this aspect of Shintoism, “gave Japanese patriotism a special tint of mysticism and cultural introversion.”

Ruminating on the above information, I was reminded of the Romans practice of deifying the Roman Emperor. It may also explain how Emperor Hirohito or Shōwa could believe Japan capable of defeating a super-power like the United States. Already aligned with Hitler and subject to the influences of the “prince of this world”, the energy engendered from the worship of the Japanese people, would further strengthen his ego and lead to him thinking he was invincible. Nonetheless, the reality was that Japan was desperate to secure resources for their growing population. To the Japanese, the United States embargo appeared to leave them with no alternative other than to declare war on America. The ironical thing is if Japan had not allied with Hitler and the “Shadow”, it would have left it open to help from the “Light.” I know that sounds crazy, but as I said whenever a person or group seeks help in a non-threatening way, they open themselves up to assistance from the spiritual forces of the “Light.” Still, this is water under the bridge, so to speak, and does not concern the present discussion. I think that Emperor Hirohito’s entry demonstrates that his basic nature could be reasoned with diplomatically, then perhaps it was not necessary to drop the atom bombs. As such, I come to the underlying reason for the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Yet to do that I first needed to look at the man responsible for the decision to drop the bomb on civilians, President Harry S. Truman. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Image of Amaterasu, one of the central kami

According to the entry for the Kami on Wikipedia, “The kamiks are the objects of respect in the Shinto religion of Japanese origin, which, unlike the European conception, can be the souls of gods, spirits, and ancestors. Since every separate act and creature can be reverent as a kami, the number of kami is potentially infinite; as a local saying goes, Japan is the “country of eight million kami.” It should be noted that the Japanese language does not distinguish between the number and the plural, so the word kami is used at the same time to name a certain deity and many ensemble.”

Post May 31st

Dear friends, in one of our discussions, Craig told me that Truman was one of the least popular presidents. Wondering why that was, as he literally presided over the end of the war, I searched for the facts of Truman’s life in his entry on Wikipedia.

From the energetic perspective there was a lot of ambiguity to the man. Harry S. Truman was born May 8th, 1884, in Lamar Missouri and became interested in politics in 1922 when he joined the Democratic Party. Over a decade later, he was chosen to represent his state in the US Senate in 1934. His entry relates that Truman “gained national prominence as chairman of the Truman Committee, formed in March 1941, which exposed waste, fraud, and corruption in Federal Government wartime contracts.” To reiterate, in President Roosevelt’s fourth term, Truman replaced Henry Wallace as Vice President. Then just 82 days after taking office, when FDR was Tecumseh’s Curse’s sixth victim, dying from a cerebral hemorrhage April 12th, Truman ascended to Commander in Chief as the 33rd President. As a result, it was Truman who attended the Potsdam Conference with Joseph Stalin and Winston Churchill. After VE (Victory in Europe) Day, which coincided with his 61st Birthday, President Truman was confronted with how to end the war with Japan. In his memoirs, he cites that the reason for dropping the newly acquired atom bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki was to save lives on both sides. As we know, the use of atomic bombs ended WWII and secured Truman’s position with the American people. So, not surprisingly when he ran in the 1948 election it his own right, he won.

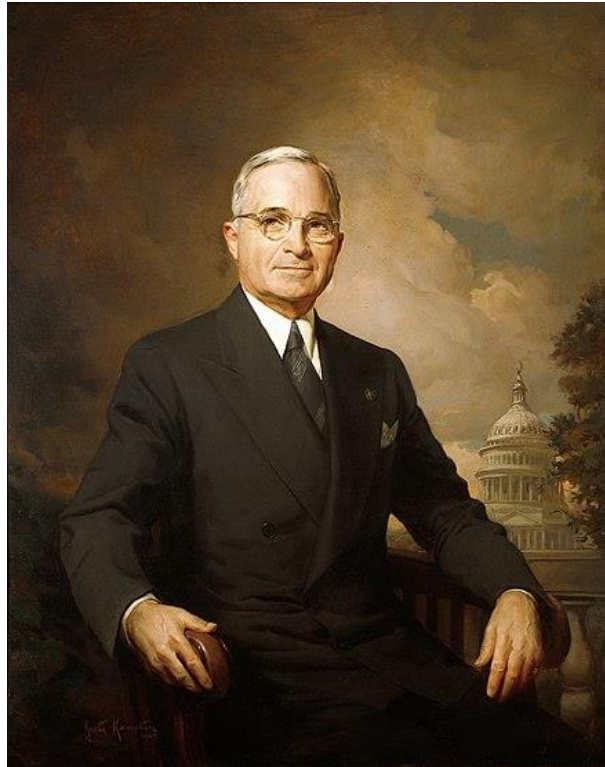

Interestingly, Truman favored President Wilson’s approach to foreign relations, believing that all nations needed to “unite to solve the world’s problems.” To that end, he endorsed the creation of the United Nations in 1945. Moreover, he “enacted the Marshall Plan to spend $13 Billion in rebuilding Europe.”

Truman’s record shows that he “was sympathetic to Jews” long before he was president in 1943, as while “a senator he called for a homeland for those Jews who survived the Nazi regime.” Once elected in his own right as president, “Truman recognized the State of Israel on May 14th, 1948, eleven minutes after it declared itself a nation.” Concerning this “decision”, he later wrote: “Hitler had been murdering Jews right and left. I saw it, and I dream about it even to this day. The Jews needed some place where they could go. It is my attitude that the American government couldn’t stand idly by while the victims [of] Hitler’s madness are not allowed to build new lives.”

While running for his first official term on June 24th, 1948, the USSR (Soviet Union) showed its intentions to Truman by setting up a blockade to 3 sectors of West Berlin. Since as President, he was unwilling to risk triggering hostilities between the Soviets and the West, Truman rejected the military’s advice to run the blockade. Instead, he opted to take “Ernest Bevin’s plan to supply the blockaded city by air”, resulting in the largest successful airlift to supply the trapped allies. Many believe this was the reason Truman won the election, not his presiding over the end of the war. President Truman's confrontation with the Soviet Union over the latter's blockade, set the scene for his presidency. From an energetic perspective, obviously, the USSR's actions in 1948 was the first overt move in the antagonism between Communism and Capitalism, exactly as the "Shadow" had intended.

The American president soon discovered that Joseph Stalin saw the US as an enemy, when two years later in 1950, the USSR backed North Korea in its move to conquer its southern neighbor. Earlier I said that this short but brutal war had other consequences, which we are dealing with today. Curious to find the cause behind the situation in North Korea, I did a little research, which explained why, as we shall see, it was the first volley in the antagonism between Communism and Capitalism. Have a great day, love always, Suzzan.

Harry S Truman 1884 - 1972

According to his entry on Wikipedia, Harry S. Truman was "raised in Independence, Missouri, and during World War I fought in France as a captain in the Field Artillery. Returning home, he opened a haberdashery in Kansas City, Missouri, and was elected as a judge of Jackson County in 1922. Truman was elected to the United States Senate from Missouri in 1934. Between 1940 and 1944, he gained national prominence as chairman of the Truman Committee, which was aimed at reducing waste and inefficiency in wartime contracts.

“Truman was elected vice president in the 1944 presidential election and assumed the presidency upon Roosevelt's death in April 1945. It was only when Truman assumed the presidency that he was informed about the ongoing Manhattan Project and the atomic bomb. Truman authorized the first and only use of nuclear weapons in war against the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, leading to Japan's surrender and the end of the world war. Truman's administration engaged in an internationalist foreign policy by working closely with Britain. Truman staunchly denounced isolationism. He energized the New Deal coalition during the 1948 presidential election, despite a divided Democratic Party, and won a surprise victory against Republican Party nominee Thomas E. Dewey that secured his own presidential term.

“Truman presided over the onset of the Cold War in 1947. He oversaw the Berlin Airlift and Marshall Plan in 1948. With the involvement of the US in the Korean War of 1950–1953, South Korea repelled the invasion by North Korea. Domestically, the postwar economic challenges such as strikes and inflation created a mixed reaction over the effectiveness of his administration. In 1948, he proposed Congress pass comprehensive civil rights legislation. Congress refused, so Truman issued Executive Order 9980 and Executive Order 9981, which prohibited discrimination in federal agencies and desegregated the U.S. Armed Forces.

“Investigations revealed corruption in parts of the Truman administration, and this became a major campaign issue in the 1952 presidential election, although they did not implicate Truman himself. He was eligible for reelection in 1952 but, with poor polling, he chose not to run. Truman went into a retirement marked by the founding of his presidential library and the publication of his memoirs. It was long thought that his retirement years were financially difficult for Truman, resulting in Congress establishing a pension for former presidents, but evidence eventually emerged that he amassed considerable wealth, some of it while still president. When he left office, Truman's administration was heavily criticized. Despite this controversy, scholars rank Truman in the first quartile of American presidents. In addition, critical reassessment of his presidency has improved his reputation among historians and the general population.”
